MAN DISMEMBERED LIKE GULDENSUPPE

Bundles Boy Was Hired to Watch Give Police Another Strange Murder to Solve.

BODY WRAPPED IN OILCLOTH

"Black Hand" Marked on the Bundles Apparently as a Blind—Man Who Left Them Disappeared.

A murder similar to the notorious Guldensuppe case in the method of its execution and in the mystery which now surrounds it, was presented to the police for solution last evening. Early this morning scores of detectives and policemen in plain clothes were hunting the lower east side and the Bowery in search of a man of whom they have only the meagre description furnished by a fourteen-year-old boy.

This man was the last person, with the exception of the police, the small boy, and a second man who could have had no connection with the crime, known to have in his possession two large packages done up in black oilcloth and brown paper, in which was found the dismembered body of a man, the torso with head missing in one package, and the severed legs and arms in the other.

A fact which the police consider significant, as showing rather that the murder was not committed by an Italian than by one of that race, was the discovery upon each of the bundles of the words "Black Hand." Upon one parcel the words were written in red, apparently with chalk of that color. On the other they were in blue. In both instances the marking was on the outside of the packages, and might have been seen by anyone, but for the fact that the writing was rather dim. As it was, the words were not discovered until some time after the packages had been opened in the Oak Street Police Station.

Joseph Tokaro, a young Italian boy living at 31 Hamilton Street, was the first to receive the parcels from the man, whose description he gave later to the police.

Boy Gets Gruesome Bundle.

Tokaro, according to the story which he told to the police later, was standing in Catharine Street, near Monroe Street, soon before 6 o'clock last night when a stranger, carrying one of the parcels over each shoulder, stopped opposite him and asked:

"Do you want to earn 5 cents?"

Tokaro said that he did, and the man asked him to carry one of the parcels. The lad said they looked too heavy and wouldn't try it.

"Then come with me a short distance," said the stranger. "I want to leave these for a minute or two while I go somewhere else, and if you will watch them I'll pay you the money."

Young Tokaro accompanied the stranger while he walked up Catharine Street to Madison, down this to Oliver, and along that street until he came in front of Public School 1, about 50 feet from Henry Street. There he stopped, and, telling the boy to await his return, started off in the direction of Chatham Square. That was the last seen of him.

It was some few minutes later that John Tobin, who lives at 67 Madison Street, passed by the school house while taking a dog belonging to his sister-in-law for a short run. The dog, running along some yards ahead of Tobin, saw the packages and went over and sniffed around them. Then he barked loudly and began running about the parcels, darting toward them and then jumping away as though he intended to snatch and rend them. Young Tokaro tried to drive him off, but the dog paid no attention to him. Then Tobin came up, but the dog would not leave the packages at his command, and at last Tobin inquired what the youngster had in the parcels.

"I don't know," confessed young Tokaro, and he told how he had come by them.

Police Discover the Crime.

Policeman George Hoffman of the Oak Street Station approached then and Tobin called to him. The policeman poked at the parcels with his night stick, tried to lift them, and, finding them heavy, decided at last to investigate. He sent for the patrol wagon and had the parcels carried to the station, taking the boy and Tobin along with him.

It was in the rear room of the Oak Street Station that the parcels were opened. The first and largest one proved to contain the torso. It was clad in a soft shirt of white material with a light black stripe running through it, an undershirt of blue knitted stuff, and the waistband and upper part of a pair of trousers, apparently made of blue or black serge. The head had been cut off, apparently just below the ears. In the right side of the neck was a single stab wound. The second package contained the legs and arms. About the latter were the sleeves of the shirt the victim had been wearing, while the legs of the trousers still surrounded the dismembered limbs. There were no shoes upon the feet, which were covered with blue socks having a light black stripe. The underwear was blue like the undershirt. The limbs had been cut off close to the joints, the bones having been sawed through.

The Oak Street police notified Headquarters of the murder, and Capt. Carey, with Detectives Miller, Gloster, McGee, Lagrua, Barroa, and Bastangio hurried to the station house. Capt. Carey questioned young Tokaro and Tobin, while the other men examined the body. A physician was summoned from the Hudson Street Hospital, and he gave it as his opinion that the man had not been dead more than twenty-four hours. The detectives measured the torso and the length of the limbs, and concluded that the victim must have been a man of little more than five feet in height. He had been slight, too. The skin was fair, and the hands were soft and white, with the peculiar look, however, which comes from constant contact with water, this fact led the police to decide that the man had probably been a bartender.

Reserves Search for Suspect.

The majority of the reserves were ordered into plain clothes as soon as the detectives decided that no more could be learned from an examination of the body, and they were sent out into the Bowery and the east side to search for a man answering the description furnished by young Tokaro. The boy said that the stranger who had first had the parcels had looked to be about thirty-five years

FATTED CALF FOR G. H. PELL.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., June 10.—After a lapse of more than 100 years, arrangements have been completed here for the presentation by the people of the city of a fatted calf to the heirs of Lord Pell, the original owner of the land on which New Rochelle stands.

The presentation will take place at the Bronx Manor House, in Bronxville, on Thursday, June 24, which is the residence of George H. Pell. The Mayor, Common Council, and other citizens of New Rochelle and the North Side Board of Trade, which has arranged a jaunt through Westchester on that day, will witness the presentation of the calf.

When Lord Pell sold the 6,000 acres now comprising the city of New Rochelle to the Huguenots in 1688 for about $800 he thought that he had made such a good bargain that he threw in another 100 acres for a church on condition that the Huguenots would "every year thereafter present to him, or his heirs, or assigns, forever, on St. John's Day, one fatted calf." The Huguenots kept their word for many years, but about a century ago allowed the custom to lapse.

Recently, at the unveiling of a Huguenot monument at Hudson Park, Mr. Pell, who is a direct descendant of Lord Pell, met Mayor Raymond and reminded him that the fatted calf had not been given for many years and that this year he would make a demand on New Rochelle for the calf.

The Mayor laid the matter before the Aldermen, who decided to buy a calf and present it to Mr. Pell with appropriate ceremonies.

MORLEY BLAMES THE PRESS.

Says It Is More Responsible for Warlike Spirit Than Statesmen.

LONDON, June 10.—The Imperial Press Conference has brought its business sessions to a temporary close, and the delegates will spend the next fortnight in sightseeing. They will be present, among other events, at the naval review at Spithead next Saturday, in which 140 warships will take part. The conference will reassemble on June 25 to receive the reports of the committees.

The closing session this morning was devoted to the literature of journalism. Lord Morley, who presided, turned from the militarism that has marked the previous meetings and put forth the claim that the English tongue was a stronger and more enduring bond of imperial union than anything else, a thousand times stronger than all the achievements of soldiers and sailors, and the statesmen who had directed them.

"I know of no more stupendous and overwhelming fact," he said, "than the supreme dominance of the English tongue over the millions in the new worlds in the West and the ancient worlds in the East.

"Referring to what he called the "rebarbarizing of Europe—the rattling back into arms and the preparations to use arms," of which so much had been heard in he course of the conference—Lord Morley said he thought the press was more answerable for this than all the ministers, officialsl, and diplomats taken together, and he pleaded for a systematic and persevering work on the part of newspapers in behalf of peace among the nations.

WRIT FOR A CONSUL GENERAL.

Judge E. Henry Lacombe of the United States District Court issued an order yesterday to show cause, returnable June 18, directed to Ramon Bengoechea, Consul General of Guatemala in this city, instructing him to show cause why an injunction should not be issued restraining him from buying up and suppressing the June number of Uncle Sam's Magazine, a monthly appearing in this city.

In the June number there appears an article giving various instances of the alleged maltreatment of American citizens in Guatemala by local officials and officers of the army. This publication was annoying to the Consul General, and his agents are said to have gone about buying up the magazine from the public newsstands.

The proprietors declare that this act has damaged their advertisers in that it curtails their circulation. The order was issued on this score. It is returnable on June 18.

W. Douglas Walker, editor of the magazine, said last night that the article to which the Consul General appeared to take exception was the first of a series written by Edwin Emerson, the war correspondent, dealing with the Monroe Doctrine. The object of Col. Emerson's articles was to show that the United States does not extend to its citizens the same protection that Great Britain does to her subjects, and to urge that more stringent measures be taken in their behalf. The article already published deals with Guatemala, but others are to take up incidents in other republics.

"The action of the Consul General," said Mr. Walker, "we understand, was taken after cables had passed between the Minister at Washington and the Guatemalan Government."

FINANCING NEW COAL ROAD.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 10.—F. F. Searing of New York, President of the Delaware & Eastern Railway Company, which is building a new line from the anthracite coal region of Pennsylvania to Schenectady, where it could make a connection with the Boston & Maine system, has been in Europe for several weeks in connection with floating bonds for the enterprise to the amount of $4,000,000. Mr. Searing has just returned to London from Amsterdam. At the Savoy, where he is staying, he assured THE NEW YORK TIMES's correspondent to-day that he had met with good success in negotiating the loan.

The new line is to be a direct rival of the Delaware & Hudson, and is also likely to affect largely the New Haven Railroad's coal traffic, despite the control of the Boston & Maine by New Haven interests.

It is expected to establish a current of passenger traffic between Philadelphia and the South and the Catskill region, and eventually the St. Lawrence Valley and Montreal through New York Central connections. This phase of the enterprise, however, for particular reasons, Mr. Searing does not desire to emphasize at present. He declined to say what exact relationship the Boston & Maine and the New York Central bear to his company.

NIGHT OF TERROR ON STRANDED LINER

ALL ARE NOW SAFE IN TOWN

With all her passengers safe in this city, a crew from the wrecker Chapman started to work last night on the Spanish Mail steamship Antonio Lopez, which ran ashore on Wednesday night about half a mile west of Fire Island. Her crew is still aboard and the crew of the Chapman with the men of the life saving station from Point o' Woods are only waiting for the sea to go down to begin unloading her in the hope later of hauling her off the beach.

All Wednesday night the Lopez lay on the beach, pounded by heavy seas. Her 526 passengers, after hours of anxiety, were yesterday transferred in small boats from the stranded liner and brought to this city on the big Merritt-Chapman wrecking boat Relief. The transfer was made dangerous by a heavy ground swell, but it was accomplished without accident, and then the Lopez's passengers had to face the discomfort of a five hours' trip to this city huddled together on the deck of the Relief, exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

American Officers Checked Panic.

On board the Antonio Lopez were fifty Americans returning by the way of Europe from the Philippines. Their behavior was in striking contrast to that of the many steerage passengers, who became panic-stricken, and ran to the deck. They were stopped by the prompt action of the ship's officers, reinforced by Capt. Washington H. Grayson and Capt. Ernest Schroeder, American officers of the Philippine Constabulary. It was not until three priests, who were passengers, went below and began to chant the litany that the steerage passengers became calm.

For nearly two days before the ship stranded Capt. Mir of the Lopez had been unable to take observations, and had been steering by dead reckoning. He was two miles of his course when about 9:25 o'clock Wednesday night the fog lifted somewhat and the officers from the bridge caught a glimpse of a steamer heading out and off shore. Almost dead ahead, some distance away, was a small sailing vessel. At almost the same time the line of breakers was seen and the vessel swung quickly off. She was just a fraction of a minute too late and the bow was driven full force upon the sand. The breakers were almost under her bow.

Steerage Passengers Alarmed.

The 420 steerage passengers were in the forward part of the steamer, where the shock of striking the sand was greatest, and these were at once thrown into a panic. The first rush of officers and stewards was to the companionways leading to their quarter, and they met a throng of frightened men and women making for the decks. Led by Capts. Grayson and Schroeder, who were armed, they succeeded in keeping the frightened steerage passengers between decks. But from the hatches came to those on the decks above the crying and praying of those below, who thought the vessel was sinking.

Then the passengers began to call for the priests. Father Dominico and two other priests went among the frightened steerage passengers, assuring them there was no danger. They succeeded in partly calming their fears, and then Father Dominico, lifting up his voice, began to recite the litany. At first the other two priests alone chanted the responses, but soon most of the company joined in. A priest lifted up a small wooden cross in blessing, and a silence fell as he gave the benediction. After that there was no more trouble on board, though many prayed most of the night, and among all there was a feeling of unrest.

Life Savers Reach Steamer.

One hour after the vessel struck Edward Baker, the son of Capt. Baker of the Point o' Woods Life Saving Station, with a volunteer crew, managed to get through the breakers to the Lopez. When the small boat came into view Capt. Mir sent for Ralph B. Robinson, a passenger, to act as interpreter for him. It was impossible for Mr. Robinson to make himself heard above the roar of the breakers, and so Joseph M. Schiler essayed to communicate with the small boat by flashing signals in the Morse code, using the single electric light on the bridge to convey the dots and dashes. Those on the bridge watched, and soon a man arose in the small boat and attempted to wig wag a message. Those on board could not make out the message, and they were equally sure that those in the boat did not understand their signals, so the attempt to communicate was given up. Of the 67 first-class passengers 50 were Americans. There were 39 second-cabin passengers.

The wrecking steamer Relief arrived about 8 o'clock yesterday morning. She stayed near by, while the agent of the Spanish Line and the head of the wreckers went on board the Lopez, making the journey in one of the Relief's small boats. Half an hour later the work of transferring the passengers was begun. Four boats were used in this work. Two of the Relief's boats were used, one from the Lopez, and the other the boat of the life savers, who came out to the stranded steamer at daybreak. It took twenty trips and two hours to complete the transfer.

One who took a part in helping the foreign women to make the transfer was Mrs. F. W. McCallum of Boston, a singer in the Cathedral at Manila. One of the women passengers is a paralytic, and some difficulty was experienced in transferring her in a small boat.

By 10:30 o'clock the last of the Lopez's passengers had been lifted over the side of the Relief, and their small baggage taken to the tug.

Among those on the Lopez was A. Garcia Mier, a Spanish horse dealer, who is bringing to this country on that vessel Agulito VI., a Spanish races valued at $1,500.

Standing beside his valise on the afterdeck of the Relief John S. Powell of Newnan, Ga., returning from Butangas Province, where he is Judge of the Seventh Judicial District of the Philippines, told the story of the stranding of the

FIREMEN STRICKEN IN DR. JAMES'S HOME

FINE PAINTINGS DAMAGED

Owner Sailed for Europe Two Days Ago—Damage Put at $50,000, but May Be Much More.

A fire starting early last night, probably from defective insulation, between the floors of the handsome five-story mansion of Dr. Walter B. James, at 17 West Fifty-fourth Street, sent fireman after fireman to the number of twenty altogether staggering out into the street overcome by the thick, acrid smoke it gave forth. Most of them went again and again into the building, but four had to be taken to Flower Hospital. They were:

Capt. GEORGE BAUER, Engine 23.
Fireman EDWARD GEIGER, Truck 4.
Fireman CORNELIUS ROCK, Engine 65.

Fireman Nicholas of Truck 4 was carried half unconscious to his engine house and Capt. John Gore of Engine 54 was temporarily overcome.

The four men were carried to the stoops of houses on the other side of the street and there restoratives and oxygen had to be applied by surgons from the hospital and Dr. Archer of the Fire Department before they could be brought to consciousness. Cartin was twice overcome before he gave up the fight.

The house was unoccupied except for Mrs. C. Tobisen, a caretaker, and her daughter, for Dr. James, with his wife and son, sailed on Wednesday on the Lusitania for Europe. Chief Lantry, who finally took charge of the fight, fixed the damage at $50,000, but neighbors on the scene who knew Dr. James's collection of paintings and books, and valuable medical supplies he kept there, and his taste for fine woodwork and hangings, said the loss would be much larger.

It was the caretaker who, when in a hall of the third floor, discovered the fire and telephoned to central to send in an alarm. At the same time a passerby saw smoke pouring from the windows of a third-floor room, ran to the corner, and turned the fire box. When Battalion Chief Kane got there smoke made the whole end of the stret so dark that at first it was hard to tell where the fire was.

Hardly any flame showed from the outside. Kane sent some men through the front door; others by a ladder up to the third floor—evidently the seat of the fire. The men were forced to halt on threshold and window sill; there was a curious sharp odor in the smoke, as of a peculiar gas. Then, dragging the hose, they pushed in.

It was but a moment before Fireman Nicholas, at the head of the hose on the third floor, dropped to the floor with the hose nozzle. Those behind, groping on the floor through black smoke, found him and passed him out, writhing and choking, to the street. Cartin went next, as he tried to push with his little group of men up the stairs from the front door. He, too, was dragged back, carried to the stoop of F. W. White's house opposite, where Nicholas already lay.

By this time firemen were being pulled or dragged out every minute from the building, and others, a little recovered, were staggering back dizzy and sick. Ambulances were sent for. Chief Langford, with another truck, arrived.

Water had had no effect on the fire. He sent men in with axes to tear up floors and walls so the flames could be reached. The men went readily. The crashing of their axes and the falling of glass showed their work, but one after another, Capt. John Gore, Engine 54; Arthur Philbin, Edward Burns, John Gardiner, and, finally, quite unconscious, Capt. George Bauer of Truck 23, and others were carried, overcome by smoke and gas, to the opposite stoops.

From the University Club on the uptown corner of Fifth Avenue, and from some of the houses on the street, notably that of Col. John J. McCook, stimulants were brought and administered by the light of firemen's lanterns. The three doctors worked hard, using oxygen and artificial respiration on the men.

Fireman Curtin was taken into the basement of Dr. C. M. Cauldwell's house at 16 West Fifty-fourth Street, and there treated. Like sixteen others, among them Edward Burns and John Kinseller, he pushed again into the burning house when he was able to stand.

After two hours of hard fighting the floors, many of them made from inlaid wood, were sufficiently ripped up to give the hose play, and the work rapidly went forward. Chief Langford was driven back half overcome and Fireman Nicholas, disabled for the second time, dropped with his line on the stairway from the smoke.

He was dragged across the street and then taken to his station, in Forty-seventh Street, near Eighth Avenue, by order of the Chief. The fire had run through the walls in such a way as practically to wreck the inside of the house on the upper three floors, and the lower floors, with their valuable paintings and statuary, were drenched with water.

Dr. Frederick J. Barrett, who works with Dr. James, would give no guess at the damages. He helped in reviving the stifled men, and Father McQuade, hearing that Bauer might die, came up from the Cathedral.

After about three hours and a half the fire was extinguished. Chief Langford spoke of the sharp, gaseous odor in the smoke as something he had never before met, and could not explain; nor did he feel sure of the cause of the fire, though it had evidently started within the floors.

The house stands among some of the most valuable in the city. No. 4 is John D. Rockefeller's; his son's is at No. 13. Chauncey M. Depew's house is at No. 27 and J. B. Dixon's at No. 15.

Miss French Thrown Into a Ditch.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, June 10.—As Miss Julia French, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Tuck French, was driving through Middletown in a basket phaeton attended by a groom and accompanied by her Boston bull pup, a passing trolley car frightened the horse. Before Miss French or the groom fully realized what had happened the animal bolted and threw Miss French into a ditch of water twelve feet away, with Map, the bull dog, and the groom close beside her.

All three were very wet, but uninjured. The groom caught the horse and drove Miss French and Map home.

JEROME'S NEIGHBORS DINE IN HIS HONOR

HEAR VARIED DISCOURSE

A Plea for Party Regularity and a Suggestion That Mr. Schiff Don Silk Trousers and Live Among Them.

District Attorney Jerome startled the guests at the Neighborhood dinner given in his honor last night at "Little Hungary" on the lower east side, by making what was interpreted by those who heard him as a plea for party regularity. Incidentally he announced that he had once suggested in all seriousness that Jacob H. Schiff ought to move down to the east side and become a leader among his coreligionists in that congested section of the city.

Before the speechmaking began, there came an emphatic disclaimer on behalf of those who had arranged the Neighborhood dinner that it had no political significance whatever. But throughout the banquet hall there was a scattering of politicians representing both parties who were there as "neighbors."

Just after the speechmaking began Sheriff Thomas F. Foley, who is a Tammany district leader, came in and took a seat beside District Attorney Jerome at the guest table. Not far from where the District Attorney sat was Secretary of State Samuel S. Koenig, who is the Republican leader of an east side district.

Square in Gold as a Token.

Just before Mr. Jerome was called upon, Albert B. Jaworower, Secretary of the committee which had arranged the dinner, presented him with a tablet of ebony with a golden square mounted upon it, a replica of the emblem of the Jerome Nominators in the last campaign, under which Mr. Jerome was carried to victory on an independent ticket.

"I hope my angles will be as sharp as those depicted on this square," said Mr. Jerome in accepting the gift. "It is hard to stand up under the pounding of a nation. You feel lonesome and experience a sense that you have nobody behind you, when you are doing your level best. But on occasions like this the burden is temporarily lifted."

The part of Mr. Jerome's speech which was interpreted as a plea for party regularity was listened to by the audience amid profound silence. The District Attorney had been praising the patriotism of the Jews and their loyalty to American institutions.

"If I may venture a word of friendly criticism," he went on, "it is this. There is one fault the Jew must remedy in order to develop the highest type of American citizenship. That fault is his strong individualism. This may seem strange, coming from me, who for the most part have played a lone hand, and have done my full share in bringing about the disintegration of party which now is becoming a distinct peril.

"Nevertheless, I say you must lend yourself more to organization among yourselves. I don't care with what party you ally yourself. It's all the same to me. But you've got to develop leadership among yourselves, if you are going to be of as much use as you might be in our American commonwealth.

"The lack of leadership is what has caused so many young Jews to drift into Socialism. In some respects we are all Socialists. To a certain extent I am a Socialist myself. We all believe in the truth of the watchword of Socialism as it was uttered by a man of your race some 2,000 years ago, when He made his plea for a fuller realization of the brotherhood of man.

"The weakness of Socialism lies in the fact that the Golden Rule has not been accepted as the rule of conduct of men and women yet; that it will not be in the time of our children or of our children's children."

Mr. Jerome said there was no immediate danger of any great Socialistic wave in this country, but American institutions surely were imperiled by the disintegration of party now in progress.

Suggests a Move for Mr. Schiff.

This brought him to the Schiff incident. He told of conversation he had with an uptown Jew, who had come down to the lower east side and had met Mr. Jerome there. The conversation drifted to the lack of leadership among the east-side Jews. Mr. Jerome suggested that it would be a good thing if Mr. Schiff, with his great ability and strength, would go down to the east side and assume leadership.

"The people down here are crying out for leadership, and Mr. Schiff gives them a stone fountain in response," he said he told his friend.

"Would you have him come down here and live at Seward Park?" asked the latter in amazement.

"Why not?" said Mr. Jerome. "Let him come down here, put on a pair of silken trousers, and be one of you. Mr. Schiff is a good man, a strong man, an able man. He ought to be your leader."

This made a hit with the guests at the dinner, who applauded Mr. Jerome warmly when he brought his narrative to a close.

Mr. Jerome made a great hit when he denounced the assertion of Police Commissioner Bingham that the percentage of crime among the Jews was greater than among people of other races.

"If there should happen to be a good deal of crime on the east side," he said, "it is not on account of the fact that the people living there are Jews, but because they are crowded together as they are. Crowd any group of people together as you crowd them together down here and you are bound to get a large percentage of criminals. There is no reason for the Jews to feel sensitive about that accusation."

There were about 400 guests at the dinner, most of them east side merchants and lawyers of the more prosperous class. Kaufman Mandel, an east side banker, was to have been toastmaster, but was taken slightly ill while the dinner was in progress and compelled to retire. His place was taken by Edward Mandel, a Public School Principal, who spoke to the topic, "Jerome as a Neighbor."

Tributes to Our Neighbor.

In speaking of Mr. Jerome as a neighbor Mr. Mandel said:

"He has faithfully kept his ante-election pledge to live on the East Side. His door has never been locked, night or day, to rich or poor. All could bring their complaints to him and receive equal attention. Conditions here were not ideal eight years ago. His residence in Rutgers Street has acted as a restraining influence. The east side is the better off for Mr. Jerome's being here."

Mr. Dorf said he had voted for Mr. Jerome twice, and would be glad to vote for him again.

Mr. Rosenthal said that New York County was to be congratulated on having as honest and capable a man as Mr. Jerome in the District Attorney's office.

Just as the speechmaking began all the electric lights went out. Before the gas could be lighted by the attendants, there was a moment of confusion, which changed into laughter as somebody shouted: "Never mind, Jerome's here."

CURB TRADING ONLY IN STEEL.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 10.—The impression I gather to-night from a high authority is that the gentlemen here who are backing the plan to list United States Steel on the Bourse feel that they must be satisfied if permission is gained for Steel to be dealt in by the Coulisse, roughly corresponding to the New York Curb.

There is still a chance that the adverse ruling by the official referred to in my dispatch yesterday may be rescinded, but this is hoped for only, rather than expected.

CUBANS FEAR SPANISH CLAIM.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, June 10.—The Havana newspapers take seriously a report that Spain demands that Cuba pay a share of the Spanish national debt. The Discusion, the Conservative organ, says the claim for cannon that Gov. Magoon acknowledged was but the precursor of the new demand, and that Spain is evidently instigated by the United States, England tacitly approving.

The State Department says it has received no notification from Spain, and it totally discredits the report.

EARTHQUAKES AT MESSINA.

One Is Severe and Causes Panic—Nobody Injured.

MESSINA, June 10.—Two earthquake shocks were felt here to-day, with an interval of about six minutes. The first was slight, but the second had a strong undulatory movement, and lasted eleven seconds.

The populace was greatly frightened, and hundreds of persons ran out of the buildings. Several walls collapsed, but no one was injured.

COREYS THROWN FROM AUTO.

Get Only Few Scratches—Third Occupant Seriously Injured.

PALAISEAU, France, June 10.—An automobile in which William E. Corey, President of the United States Steel Corporation; his wife, and M. Gadilleau, manager of Mr. Corey's estate here, were driving became unmanageable to-day.

All three were thrown out, but Mr. and Mrs. Corey escaped with a few scratches. Their friend was more seriously hurt.

M. Gadilleau was taken to the château on a stretcher and examination by a physician showed that the had been seriously injured.

HEAVY HAIL RUINS CROPS.

Damage by Storm in Virginia Will Be Heavy.

BUCHANAN, Va., June 10.—The neighborhood of Collierstown, in Rockbridge County, twelve miles west of Lexington, was visited yesterday by the most destructive hailstorm ever known in that section.

For a distance of ten miles in length and more than half a mile wide, vegetation was totally destroyed. Wheat, corn, and garden vegetables were driven to the earth. Hail drifted in ravines to the depth of two feet or more. Farms were ruined, all the soil being washed from the uplands. Out of entire fields of heading wheat not a single stalk was left standing.

DYNAMITE DESTROYS SHIP.

Crew Leaves Before Fire Reaches Explosive and Is Saved.

ALGIERS, June 10.—The German steamer Ava, from Hamburg for Vladivostok, blew up last night about ten miles off Pantellaria Island.

Fire started in the steamer during the night, and as dynamite formed a large part of the cargo, the crew lost no time in making its escape in the boats. A few minutes later the dynamite exploded with terrific force, tearing the steamer to pieces.

All of the crew were picked up by the steamer Eastgate and landed here to-night.

NEWPORT PAYS SOME DEBTS.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., June 10.—The round-up of delinquent Summer residents who forgot to pay their debts has begun, with excellent results. The most recently collected bills include a board bill at a fashionable resort in Aiken, amounting to $500; Carl Berger, the restaurateur, $100; Brooks Brothers, clothiers, of New York, $300, and Lawyer Charles H. Keohne, Jr., of Newport, $100 for fees. This total amount of $900 was secured through attachments. Some of the accounts were of long standing.

There are other claims being settled which have been on the books of New York and Newport merchants for more than a year, and in some cases longer. Within the past week other settlements have been made, to the surprise of Newport merchants. Several lawyers here are reported to be in possession of accounts sent from New York concerns for collection. The creditors have learned that a debtor can be jailed for debt in Rhode Island.

TROUBLE IN NASSAU HOSPITAL

Staff Won't Ask Dr. Lanehart to Quit—He's Mrs. Belmont's Doctor.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., June 10.—Physicians in Nassau County are much interested in a new development in the affairs of the Nassau Hospital. The Executive Committee is understood to have asked for the resignation of Dr. Louis N. Lanehart of Hempstead, L. I. It is understood the staff of the hospital, by a vote of 5 to 4, has refused to take up the matter.

It was mainly through the energy of Dr. Lanehart that the Nassau Hospital was established first in a private house in Fulton Avenue, Hempstead.

The attitude of the doctors in refusing to approve the application for Dr. Lanehart's resignation is considered a direct slap at the Executive Committee, which is composed in part of Roswell Eldredge, Miss Atala W. Thayer, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. William M. Baldwin, Mrs. Edward Willets, Thomas W. Albertson, Mrs. J. A. Albertson, Hiram R. Smith, and Townsend Scudder. The matter will probably now go up to the Board of Directors. If Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont returns from Europe before the meeting she is expected to pour oil on the troubled waters. Dr. Lanehart is the O. H. P. Belmont physician.

TAFT ORDERS INQUIRY INTO SUGAR TRUST

EARLE'S HELP IS NEEDED

Revisionist Senators Will Make the Most of Compromised Suit Scandal in Renewing Fight on the Trust.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—President Taft is taking a personal interest in the manner in which the Sugar Trust compromised the suit against it by the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company, and is going to find out what prospect there is of a successful criminal prosecution of the trust.

The practical confession that it was guilty civilly under the Sherman law, which the trust made in agreeing to pay $2,000,000 and return the securities for a loan of $1,250,000 rather than face the possible verdict of the jury, led to the belief here that after all criminal prosecution under the same law which has just brought the trust civilly to terms may result in conviction and punishment of some of the trust officials.

President Taft called in Attorney General Wickersham this morning and directed him to look into the case at once and see what could be done. There is reason to believe that the Department of Justice has already begun to study the case, with a view to possible commencement of criminal proceedings, but the department is extremely reticent about such cases.

There has been no fuss and feathers about the handling of the Department of Justice since Mr. Wickersham became Attorney General, and it has been announced authoritatively several times that there would be no prosecution of cases in the newspapers as long as he is at the head of the department. But there has been an apparent increase of activity and of vigor which indicates that if the Attorney General finally concludes that there is a good case against the trust on the evidence presented by the Pennsylvania Refining Company, or with other evidence which may be obtainable, there will be a prosecution which will make up in energy what it may lack spectacularly.

Did Trust Fear Exposure?

It is believed here that there may be something in the suggestion from the Department of Justice yesterday that possibly the trust compromised to avoid the danger of exposure of its business methods during the presentation of its defense, with consequent disastrous effects on its tariff prospects.

The fight on the sugar schedule is certain to be renewed when the bill comes into the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, and the opponents of the trust are securing a mass of additional information to use then. They are contending for the elimination of the Dutch standard, which they declare to be the mainstay of the trust.

A demonstration was made to President Taft this morning by an independent sugar producer, who had a set of refining apparatus rigged up at the White House, and showed the President how sugar is refined. He also had samples of the different colors of sugar, ranging from low to high polariscopic test. The point of his contention was that the retention of the Dutch standard forced foreign sugar producers to make a product that tested below No. 16, Dutch standard, and under 96 by the polariscope, in order to get it into the country at less than the duty on refined sugar, and that the result of this was to force all such producers to dispose of their sugar to the trust, since there was no popular market for sugar darker than No. 16, no matter what its degree of purity.

New Scandal Aids Revisionists.

In renewing their fight on the Sugar Trust the revisionist Senators will make the most of the result of the suit of the Pennsylvania Company against it. The confession of the trust in the fraudulent weighing cases furnished a powerful argument against it during the fight when the schedule came up in Committee of the Whole, and this new scandal will add weight to that ammunition when the fight is renewed.

The friends of the trust in the Senate are well aware of that fact, and are doing all they can to show that it is not the trust in which they are interested, but the independent sugar refiners of the West and Northeast. They have recognized that any open defense or support of the trust would be a detriment rather than a help to its tariff case.

The angry statement of George H. Earle, Jr., receiver of the Pennsylvania Refining Company, in Philadelphia, published in THE TIMES this morning, has attracted considerable attention here. Mr. Earle was asked if he would lay his evidence before the Department of Justice, and firmly replied that he would not, because he had tried twice to get the Government, under President Roosevelt and Attorney General Bonaparte, to prosecute, and could not do so. It was pointed out this afternoon, however, that he had never appealed to Attorney General Wickersham, and that his denunciation of the Taft Administration because Mr. Wickersham's partner was of counsel for the Sugar Trust was somewhat previous, in view of the facts.

Believe Earle Will Give Evidence.

Before President Taft had read what Mr. Earle had said he had started the machinery of the Department of Justice to work on the case, and, although it is too early to make any prediction as to what the result will be, it is expected here that Attorney General Wickersham will be likely to conclude that there is "probable cause of action," as the lawyers put it. Under such circumstances, it is not believed that Mr. Earle would refuse to submit his evidence to the Attorney General and to lend what assistance he can to the prosecution. There is no doubt that his assistance would be of the greatest value, for he has just demonstrated his ability to prepare and present such a case that the trust voluntarily gave up millions rather than face the danger of having to pay a much greater sum.

When the attention of Attorney General Wickersham was called this afternoon to the statement of Mr. Earle he simply put it aside with a laugh and refused to discuss it in any manner, saying merely that he was not called upon to make any reply to such a statement. It was said by another official of the department that Mr. Earle's comment upon the Attorney General was utterly uncalled for and unjustified, especially inasmuch as there had been no communication whatever between him and the department since Mr. Wickersham became Attorney General. "If Mr. Earle desired any notice taken of his grievance," it was said, "he should have put his complaint in such form that the department could give it attention."

United States District Attorney Wise denied emphatically last night a report circulated earlier in the day that the Federal Grand Jury here is considering any phase of the Sugar case as a result of the compromise effected in the proceedings instituted by the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company against the American Sugar Refining Company. Mr. Wise said he had not yet read the record of the suit tried before Judge Holt, and in any event would not take any action without first conferring with Attorney General Wickersham.

BONAPARTE'S EXPLANATION.

Ex-Attorney General Says Earle Offered No Evidence Against Trust.

An interview with ex-Attorney General Bonaparte in Baltimore, in replying to charges made by George H. Earle, Jr., of Philadelphia, that he had refused to take action against the Sugar Trust, although proof was offered, was printed in The Evening Post yesterday. Mr. Bonaparte was quoted as saying:

"I did not want to use the powers of the Government to bring pressure to bear in favor of either party in what was a purely private controversy. Had Mr. Earle offered me any evidence that involved the public interest, I should have acted. Mr. Earle was told that if, in the course of the suit he had brought against the Sugar Trust, any evidence, or any state of facts was developed which would call for or justify Federal interference, the Department of Justice would then consider taking action.

"If the Government had participated in the suit brought to compel a settlement of the differences between the Pennsylvania Refining Company and the Sugar Trust, and in the course of the trial there had been no developments of fact justifying Federal action, the Department of Justice would have been put in the position of using its large powers as between two private litigants. The impropriety and evil of such a course are obvious. The one proper cause for the Government, as I saw it, in view of the fact that Mr. Earle offered the department no evidence—merely statements—was to wait and see what evidence was disclosed by the action brought by Mr. Earle to discover if any public interest was endangered warranting Federal action."

NEW PLACE FOR EARLE.

Elected on Philadelphia Rapid Transit Board—Loath to Accept.

PHILADELPHIA, June 10.—City Councils to-day adopted resolutions directing the City Solicitor to bring proceedings to determine the right of the Philadelphia Transit Company to withdraw from sale the six for a quarter tickets without the consent of the city. Common Councils also adopted a resolution demanding that the tickets be restored.

George H. Earle, Jr., was elected at a joint meeting of Councils to succeed State Senator Clarence Wolf as one of the city's three representatives on the Rapid Transit Board. Mr. Earle is receiver for the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company, which entered the $30,000,000 suit against the American Sugar Refining Company. He said he felt loath to accept the place, but if he did so he would dispose of all his transit shares.

SAYS BAD MEAT IS PASSED.

Ex-United States Inspector Charges System Is Farce in East St. Louis.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., June 10.—After eighteen months' service as a United States Meat Inspector in East St. Louis packing houses J. F. Harms has resigned, and has written a letter to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, demanding an investigation of the meat inspection system at the National Stock Yards, the point from which St. Louis is supplied. Harms asserts that he resigned because he could not tolerate the conditions he saw, and that Inspectors in charge of the Bureau of Animal Industry are too lenient with the packers.

Much meat that should never go into food products, he charges, is passed by the Government Inspectors and goes upon the market tagged "U. S. inspected and passed." The charges Harms makes are supported by another Inspector still in the service, who says he will testify to their accuracy before any investigator.

"The inspection at the National Stock Yards," Harms says, "is costing the people approximately $100,000 a year, and it is not actually worth $1 to them. For when the word is passed from the Inspector in charge on to the Inspectors actually doing the work on the floors that they are getting too many condemned animals and to change the grading what does that mean? It means that the whole thing is a farce. The packers are getting to-day from 70 to 80 per cent. of what ought to be condemned and destroyed."

Harms goes on to give details of what he asserts to be the actual, unclean, and unsanitary conditions in the packing house, which challenge comparison with those in Mr. Sinclair's book.

Chief Inspector Clancy, discussing the charges, asserted that such cases were not uncommon, because the duties of the Chief Inspector called for decisions in matters of doubt.

"Many of the other charges, I am sure, cannot be true," said Dr. Clancy. "He has not complained to me about my decisions nor to my assistant, Dr. William H. Meadors. We are ready to be investigated at any time."

ARRESTED FOR EXTORTION.

Two Professional Bondsmen Accused of Demanding $250 to Free a Woman.

Bernard Barth of 16 Second Avenue and Louis Katz of 43 Forsyth Street, alleged to be professional bondsmen and charged by Gretchen Miller of 241 East Thirteenth Street with having tried to extort money from her in return for obtaining her discharge after she had been arrested for violation of the tenement house law, were both arrested by order of Magistrate Barlow in the Yorkville Court yesterday, where the Miller woman's case came up for trial after several adjournments.

The woman had told her story of the extortion through her lawyer at a former hearing of her case. The Magistrate first issued subpoenas for the men, and then had a detective assigned to the case from Headquarters.

The Miller woman had three witnesses in court yesterday and testified that Barth and Katz had demanded $250 from her, saying that Katz would give some of it to the police, and then exert his influence with the Magistrate. She did not pay the money, she added.

The woman's witnesses corroborated her testimony, saying they had heard the proposal made, and the detective then arrested the men.

Immigration Commissioner Williams discovered yesterday that ten Russian immigrants, who arrived on the steamship Alice from Libau recently, and were ordered to be deported, had turned over their railroad tickets to Canada, where they were bound, to an agent of the Russian Immigration Society, 15 East Ninety-seventh Street, on the promise that the money obtained by refunding the tickets would be returned before they would be sent back home.

Mr. Williams sent for the agent, who stated that he had turned the tickets over to the steamship agent, and he understood that the latter had paid the money back to the immigrants. On investigation, the Commissioner found that this was untrue, and a Russian priest who visited Ellis Island yesterday said that the immigration agent would not be seen again.

Commissioner Williams thereupon wrote to the Russian Immigration Society, stating that until it had repaid the immigrants the value of their tickets (about $125,) its agents would be debarred from Ellis Island. Assurances have been given that the money will be paid.

The ten immigrants will remain on the Island until June 16.

SUCCESS WELL WON, TAFT TELLS WRIGHTS

Presenting Medals to Brothers, He Hopes Airships Will Serve Peace, Not War.

TRUE AMERICANS, HE SAYS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—President Taft to-day justified his title of "Great Pacificator," when, in presenting medals to Orville and Wilbur Wright, he called upon the representatives of foreign nations to join with him in the earnest wish that the aeroplane may be developed with a view to its commercial advantages rather than to its use in time of war. His words caused a deep impression and were followed by an outburst of applause.

The presentation of the gold medals awarded by the Aero Club of America took place in the East Room of the White House. Nearly 1,000 persons were present to greet the aviators. These included many women, representatives of all Embassies and Legations, officers of the army and navy, members of the Cabinet, and aviators from all over the country.

Representative Herbert Parsons was the first speaker. He acclaimed the Wright brothers as "conquerors of the air," and declared that this was the first time a President of the United States had given his official indorsement to the science of aeronautics since George Washington lent his presence to a balloon ascension. He then introduced A. Holland Forbes, President of the Aero Club of America, who spoke briefly before placing the medals in the hands of the President. Mr. Taft, standing in the broad doorway at the west side of the room, spoke as follows:

The President's Speech.

"I esteem it a great honor and an opportunity to present these medals to you as an evidence of what you have done. I am glad—perhaps at a delayed hour—to show that in America it is not true that 'a prophet is not without honor save in his own country.' It is especially gratifying thus to note a great step in human discovery by paying honor to men who bear it so modestly. You made this discovery by a course that we of America like to feel is distinctively American—by keeping your noses right at the job until you had accomplished what you had determined to do.

"It has been said that this is the first Presidential recognition of aeronautics since President Washington. Well, all I have to say is, that I had a predecessor who, if aeronautics had proceeded as far when he left office as they have to-day, would not only have gone down under the water in a submarine boat, but would have gone up into the air in a flying machine. No one had a more earnest interest, a more active interest, and a greater desire to see into the things that make for progress than my predecessor.

"There may be some reasons why some Presidents have not figured in aeronautics. I see that these gentlemen who have flown in the air are constructed more on the plan of the birds than some of us.

"Mr. Justice Brown, in commenting on the law of patents, which is supposed to follow the proper rule in awarding merit to discovery, says that in the patent law it is the last step that counts—that is the difference between failure and success, and that step you gentlemen have taken. I doubt not that whatever improvements are hereafter made for sailing the air in machines heavier than the air, the principles that you have discovered and applied and the method of their application will be the basis of all successful ones.

"I don't like to think, and I decline to think, that these instrumentalities that you have invented for human use are to be confined in their utility to war. I presume that they will have great value in war, and I suppose that all of us representatives of the various Governments ought to look at this matter, following the rules of Governments of to-day, from the standpoint of their utility in war; but I sincerely hope that these machines will be increased in usefulness to such a point that even those of us who now look at them as not for us, may count on their ability to carry more than 'thin' passengers in times of peace.

"Many great discoveries have come by accident. Men working in one direction have happened on a truth that developed itself into a great discovery, but you gentlemen have illustrated the other and on the whole much more commendable method. You planned what you wished to find and then you worked it out until you found it.

"I congratulate you on the result. I congratulate you on the recognition that you have received from all the crowned heads of Europe, and I congratulate you that in receiving it you maintained the modest and dignified demeanor worthy of American citizenship."

Makes Miss Wright Blush.

There was enthusiastic applause at the conclusion of the President's address. He regarded the company smilingly for a moment, and then turning to the Wright brothers he shook them by the hand. A young woman, clad in black, stood back in the press just behind Orville Wright, her face beaming with delight and pride. It was Miss Katherine Wright.

"I know this must be Miss Wright," said Mr. Taft, extending his hand as the crowd made way for him. "You must be proud of your brothers and you have every reason to be."

Miss Wright blushed as she shook the President's hand, but her eyes were alight with pleasure.

"Come on, you winged men," said Mr. Taft, turning again to the brothers, "I suppose we'll have to be photographed once more."

The Wrights arrived in Washington early in the day and were met at the station by a committee from the Aero Club of America and the Aero Club of Washington. They were escorted in automobiles to the Cosmos Club, where a reception and luncheon awaited them at noon. They left to-night for Dayton, Ohio, where they are to receive a big reception next Thursday and Friday from their fellow townsmen.

During the morning the Wrights called on Gen. James Allen, Chief of the Signal Corps, and told him they would ship their aeroplane here next week to complete the demonstrations for the War Department at Fort Myer. During the following week the final flights will be made and neither the War Department nor the Wrights doubt the successful outcome.

The brothers have decided that Orville Wright shall have the honor of completing the trials he began last Summer, which ended in the accident that resulted in the death of Lieut. Selfridge and in serious injury to himself. Miss Wright, with the memory of that accident fresh in her memory, did not want Orville to make the flight over the scene of his accident, but her objections were overruled. Orville, for a purely sentimental reason, as he confesses, is determined to carry the affair to a successful conclusion.

The aeroplane which will be used in the flights will be similar in construction to the one used at the fort last year, and will actually be driven by the same motor, but it will have additional guy wires in the rear to preclude the repetition of such an accident as sent Lieut. Selfridge to his death. The final distance test will be over a course five miles out and back to the starting point, going with and coming against the wind.

A speed of not less than thirty-six miles an hour must be maintained throughout the flight. The medals given to the Wrights to-day were identical in design and were the work of V. D. Brenner of New York. One side bears a small representation of an aeroplane in full flight, while on the reverse the words "Aero Club of America" overlap profile portraits of the two brothers, beneath which are the inscriptions "W. Wright, Sept. 21, 1908, Le Mans, France," and "O. Wright, Sept. 9, 1908, Fort Myer, Va., U. S. A." These refer to the two world's records made by the brothers within a few days of each other.

CALL FOR DR. J. R. STEVENSON.

Baltimore Church Seeks Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Pastor.

A committee composed of Gen. James A. Gary and six other members of the Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church of Baltimore, Md., came to this city yesterday and extended a call to the pastorate of that church to the Rev. Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, who is now pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Stevenson said last night that he had the matter under consideration, but had arrived at no definite decision yet.

He became pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church seven years ago and has been notably successful.

old, was of medium height, although heavily built, and wore a brown suit of clothes and a black derby, the latter having a flat brim. The boy recalled also that he had worn a dark mustache. This was all that he could remember of him.

The police were not prepared to offer any theory of the murder last night, but it is known that they are of the opinion that the murdered man had been the victim of some gang fight, or had been picked out for punishment by some gang of which he might have been a member. The neighborhood in which the stranger turned over his bundles to young Tokaro is that in which the "Humpty Jacksons," the "Yakey Yakes," the "Monk Eastmans," and other notorious gangs once held forth, and the murder of "Kid" Twist at Coney Island a year ago showed that although such gangs are not as open in their vendettas as they were a few years ago, nevertheless they still exist, and the feuds between them and among their own numbers are as fierce as ever.

If the man who gave Tokaro his parcels is ever caught, the police believe he will be found to be a member of some such gang.

Deputy Commissioner Woods heard of the murder late last night and came immediately to Police Headquarters, where he entered into a consultation with Inspector McCafferty, head of the Detective Bureau, and Capt. Carey of the Oak Street Station. The police could tell him little, however, and had to confess themselves practically at sea.

Inspector McCafferty issued a long statement shortly after midnight, in which he rehearsed the story of the finding of the body and said that as soon as he was notified of it he sent out every available detective, including eighteen men from the platoon off duty with instructions to make a house to house search of the neighborhood in which the body was delivered to the Tokaro boy. Describing the appearance of the body the Inspector said:

"It bore no distinctive marks. The nails looked like those of a man who gave them no especial care, but they were not those of a laborer. The skin was light in color and smooth. I should say that the man had been of fairly light complexion, with brown hair. There were no knotted veins to show medium or advanced age, and I should say that the man was young. The leg below the knee was well developed and shapely, as though the man had been energetic and somewhat of a walker. The arm was muscular but not overdeveloped, and did not look like that of a man accustomed to very hard manual labor."

The Inspector admitted that at present he had no clue.

"It is like so many other cases," he said, "which seem unsolvable at first. I'll bet $100 we get the murderer, though."

Malcomson Estate to Relatives.

The will of Alfred S. Malcomson, the chemical manufacturer who died on June 4, leaves his sister, Catherine H. Malcomson, $55,000; to his sister Harriet O. Todd, $10,000, and to his brothers, Henry T. and Abraham B. Malcomson, $25,000 each. J. D. Malcolmson gets $15,000. The nephews of his brother Abraham receive $65,000, and $45,000 goes to the nieces and nephews of his sister, Harriet O. Todd. Brothers and sisters receive the residue.

PLAN BRANCH BANKS FOR SOUTH AMERICA

Morgan Syndicate Contemplates Financial Operations There as Well as in China.

TAFT AND ROOT PAVED WAY

Administration Looks for Investment by Other Interests Involving Heavy Increase in Trade with This Country.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—President Taft and Secretary Knox are pleased over the promising outlook for the expansion of American commercial enterprise in China and in South America. For years the Government has been pointing out to capitalists the opportunities for making investments in both these directions, but these efforts have met with only indifferent success when they have had any at all.

There has never been any co-operation on the part of the larger financial concerns of the country with the Government in such enterprises. Now President Taft and Secretary Knox find a syndicate composed of some of the strongest interests in the country ready to take hold of the matter, and the prospects are that the results will be so satisfactory as to bring other interests into the field.

It was largely with the idea of interesting American capital in the possibilities of South America, while at the same time preparing the way for such an American advance, that former Secretary of State Root made his famous trip around South America in 1906.

It appears that the syndicate, composed of J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the First National Bank, and the National City Bank of New York, which is undertaking to secure a share in the Chinese loan on the Hankow-Shechuen Railway, is preparing also to embark in South America and has in contemplation the establishment of branch banks in some of the more important cities there. This is regarded here as the first step toward securing for this country the preponderance in South American trade which naturally should come to it, but which has been held by Europe for so many years. Establishing United States banks in South America will tend to accelerate more rapid and direct means of steamship communication, and once the transportation and banking facilities are provided there is no doubt on the part of the Administration that the United States trade with South America will go forward by leaps and bounds.

Greater Field in China.

The situation in China differs from that in South America, and offers an even greater field of opportunity, especially if the diplomatic end of it is skillfully managed. The entering wedge for American railway enterprise there was secured years ago through the well-known Brice concession for a railroad from Canton to Hankow. The late Senator Brice was at the head of that enterprise, but before it could be carried far enough to assure success the Chinese Government concluded to take over the construction of all railways and the concession reverted to the Empire. At that time there was an agreement between China on the one hand and the United States and Great Britain on the other that in case China needed money to develop her railways the other two countries should participate in the loans. When the time came, however, that such participation was possible there seemed to be no desire on the part of American capitalists to embark in such an enterprise.

It is only recently that a change in sentiment has occurred. The well-known interest of President Taft in all Oriental conditions and his thorough familiarity with the questions arising from them have helped to establish confidence on the part of the financial interests that the Administration would do all in its power to see that they had fair play and a full opportunity to make the most of their investments in China.

Whether the Americans are successful in securing an interest in the $27,500,000 loan just arranged for or not, it is expected that they will be participants in any further loans that may be arranged.

President Taft is especially anxious to see China adjust her currency system on a solid basis, and this Government will do all it can to assist in such an arrangement. It is hoped that China will adopt the gold standard, and there is reason to believe that this is coming before very long. It probably will adopt a system similar to that in use in the Philippine Islands, with a ratio of 32 to 1 between gold and silver.

Straight Is Well Equipped.

The opinion in American circles is that the syndicate of American financiers is doing a very wise thing in sending an agent to China to look out for its interests, and the belief is that it has chosen a very well-equipped man in Willard Straight, United States Consul General at Mukden. For several months he has been in Washington in charge of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs in the State Department.

It is expected by the Administration that the next few years will see the opening of all sorts of opportunities for commercial and industrial investment in China. The territory of the Empire is so great that the construction of anything like adequate railway systems will involve great expenditures, and it is the purpose of this Government to secure not only opportunity for the investment of capital there, but also the development of American commerce through the sale of materials and machinery needed by the Chinese.

It has been pointed out that such a development of American enterprise as is contemplated will constitute a far greater and more effective bar to any possible Japanese menace in the Far East than would almost any other line of procedure.

A high official of the State Department, in discussing the Eastern situation to-day, dwelt upon the number of disinterested ways in which the United States had dealt with China and expressed the opinion that it was about time that we turned our attention to the obvious possibilities of legitimate enterprise there.

"We took the lead in the open-door arrangement," he said, "which, more than anything else that has been done, makes for the preservation of the integrity of the empire. We have always been in the lead, since China was opened up for Western trade, in doing things to help her without regard to any possible reward, while other countries have been looking for the immediate benefits. It strikes me that there has been plenty of altruism and too little participation."

AMERICAN CAPITAL APATHETIC.

Britain Replies That It Had Full Opportunity in China.

LONDON, June 10.—The British Government has replied to the American memorandum submitted by Ambassador Reid regarding American participation in the tripartite loan for the financing of the Hankow-Szechuen Railroad in China.

It is understood that in this communication Great Britain takes the position that the arrangements concluded in 1904 were made separately between America and China and between Great Britain and China, and that American financiers have had an equal opportunity with British interests to obtain a share of this loan. For some years it has been generally assumed that America, not having shown any interest in the undertaking, was not disposed to participate in the loan.

Agent of Chinese Investment Group to Sail in Two Weeks.

Willard Straight, now United States Consul General at Mukden, who is to be the representative in China of the group of bankers formed to encourage investment of American capital in China, held a conference yesterday in the financial district with the bankers interested in the undertaking.

He will leave for the Far East in about two weeks. The financing which this group will first undertake will be participation in Chinese imperial loans and in railroad and other similar loans backed by the Chinese Government. Participation in private undertakings in China may follow later, but the syndicate is not now, it was said yesterday, turning its attention to anything but undertakings in which the Chinese Government is directly interested.

SETBACK FOR BIG CANAL.

Engineers Report That St. Louis to Gulf Project Is Not Desirable.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—The proposed fourteen-foot deep waterway project from St. Louis to the Gulf received a blow to-day when the Board of Engineers reported to Congress that such a waterway is not desirable. The waterway would cost $128,000,000 for construction and $6,000,000 annually for maintenance, the engineers say.

The report was based on a survey of the Mississippi River by a special board of engineers created by act of Congress. The conclusions reached by both the special board and the regular board of engineers are practically the same.

ST. LOUIS, June 10.—W. K. Kavanaugh, President of the Lakes to the Gulf Deep Waterway Association, said of the report:

"They admit the project is feasible. That is all we want to know. Whether the Government engineers do or do not think it would be worth the money will not make any difference to the people."

SEARCH ANARCHISTS' HOMES.

French Police Suspect Them of Systematic Telegraph Wire Cutting.

PARIS, June 10.—In consequence of systematic wire cutting, which is now of daily occurrence throughout France, the police to-day searched the residences of twenty-four well-known revolutionists and Anarchists, including that of Gustav Hervé, the anti-military agitator. They are suspected of being the organizers of a widespread scheme for the destruction of telegraph wires by means of agents in the provinces.

A number of papers were seized in the raids.

Lopez. He said that the thing that struck him most forcibly was the contrast between the conduct of those in the cabin and those in the steerage. During the night, he said, the vessel kept on a pretty even keel, but it was rather an awsome experience for all to listen to the continual thud as the seas broke against her side and went tearing and thundering along her length.

Nine stowaways from the Antonio Lopez caused excitement while the passengers were being landed from the tug. As soon as the tug came alongside the pier three of the men climbed ashore and attempted to make a break for liberty. They almost succeeded, for the immigration officials were so busy with the passengers that they neglected to watch them closely. The customs agents had built a barrier of barrels across the pier, and two of the men were captured before they could get past it. The third succeeded in getting over the barrier, but was caught half way down the pier. The other six also attempted to get to the pier, but they were held in the boat. All were then rounded up and locked up in a room on the pier until the boat left with the passengers for Ellis Island.

Among those arriving on the Lopez were W. O. Kaminer, Treasurer of Rizal Province, Luzon Island; Capt. Grayson, in charge of the constabulary in the same province; Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Ridwell, the former Division Superintendent of Schools in Laguna Province, Luzon Island; Judge Powell and Capt. Schroeder of the Philippine constabulary.

The passengers from the Lopez were landed at the company's pier, 8, in the East River. Many of the second cabin and steerage passengers are on the way to Cuba. They were taken to Ellis Island and through the courtesy of Commissioner of Immigration William Williams.

POINT O' WOODS, June 10.—The wrecker Chapman now has one line aboard the wrecked steamer Lopez, but the sea is still very high. Her crew still remains on board, and there is also a crew from the wrecker waiting for the moment the sea goes down that they may proceed to unload her.

INCOME TAX VOTE PUT OFF IN SENATE

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—All consideration of the income tax was postponed this afternoon until to-morrow on suggestion of Senator Bailey in view of the fact that the woolen schedule was still pending. To-morrow Senator Aldrich will move to further postpone it, and that motion is expected to be carried without serious difficulty. The impression to-day is general that the Finance Committee is reconciled to a 2 per cent. tax on corporations as a substitute for the income tax, while advocates of some form of supplementary tax are confident that they have enough votes with which to force the adoption of some levy, either the dividend tax proposed by the committee or the income tax.

The most important development of the day was the renewal of the understanding between the Republican and Democratic advocates of an income tax. The leaders on both sides insist to-night that all efforts to weaken their strength by compromising with the tax on dividends have failed. They are claiming to-night seventeen Republicans who will stand out for the income tax over every substitute, though it is admitted that some of the more doubtful adherents of the tax may be induced to line up with the Senate organization on any compromise that is suggested.

Bailey to Introduce Amendment.

Senator Bailey, according to the agreement reached to-day, will introduce his amendment as it stands when the time comes. To that Mr. Cummins, the Republican leader of the income taxers, will offer several amendments modifying the Bailey proposition, and all of his suggestions will be accepted. Senator Bailey will reduce his levy from the 3 per cent. originally intended to the 2 per cent. favored by Senator Cummins. Senator Cummins's tax on corporations will be incorporated into the amendment as well as the provisions contained in the Republican measure for recouping persons who would otherwise be taxed doubly, and those who, having an income of less than $5,000 would otherwise be burdened. The seventeen Republican votes claimed for this joint amendment, with the solid support of the Democratic Senators, gives the tax a safe majority even if Senator McEnery of Louisiana should continue his policy of voting with the Republican machine.

Friends of the Finance Committee members spoke confidently to-day of the committee's ability to put through a 2 per cent. tax on dividends with the proviso that it should run only two years—long enough to tide over the period when a deficit is expected to develop.

On the other hand while some advocates of a supplementary tax admit the possibility of the acceptance of a tax on dividends, the proposal emanating from the committee to limit the duration of such a tax to two years met with immediate and sweeping opposition.

Stamp Tax Provision.

There are other proposed substitutes. Senator Dixon and his supporters are still trying to develop sentiment in favor of the inheritance tax, though they are becoming convinced that they are making little headway. To the surprise of many of the organization leaders, it was learned this afternoon that a Republican regarded as regular had ready an amendment carrying a stamp tax provision to be offered as a substitute if developments seem to warrant it.

The Senator told the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES that while he was not sure that his amendment would be introduced, he felt it was better than any income tax, because an income tax provision would certainly result in three years' litigation, while the stamp tax would at once begin to supply the needs of the Government. The corporation tax, too, he said, as it also affects banks, would prove a heavy burden to them.

Against Mr. Aldrich's motion to postpone to-morrow there will be a small Republican vote, but as it is understood Mr. Aldrich will come as near as possible to fixing a date for its further consideration that will coincide with the disposal of the regular schedule. This vote will be small. Democrats are expected to vote against the motion to postpone, but even Senator Bailey's objection to the motion is expected to be perfunctory.

The morning session of the Senate brought the woolen schedule near its close. Mr. Dolliver was the leader of the insurgents throughout the day, introducing amendment after amendment directed at reductions of various items, but they went the way of all other amendments not fathered by the committee, and the committee's majority was as large as usual. Senator Dolliver's amendment limiting all woolen duties to 10 per cent. ad valorem was defeated by a vote of 43 to 32, and that vote can be taken as normal.

HOW FOUR WOMEN BEAT OFF A ROBBER

KNIFE AND BAR HIS WEAPONS

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., June 10.—As thrilling a story of a midnight fight with an armed burglar as ever was told was told to-day to a TIMES reporter by Miss Ada Townsend, who with the aid of her sister Bessie, her friend, Miss Elizabeth L. Horsley, and her widowed mother, Mrs. Beekman Townsend, beat off the man who attempted to rob their house at Mill Hill Road and Bayville Road last night. Not one of the four escaped uninjured from the encounter. Miss Horsley, known as "Kitty" to her intimate friends, who was visiting the Townsends from Media, Penn., is now in the hospital at Mineola after undergoing two operations made necessary by the wounds she received.

The Townsend home is a two-story picturesque frame building standing 200 yards back from the nearest road on an eminence flanked by lawns and lofty maples that extend down to the mill pond at the foot of the hill, dividing the grounds of the house from the roadway and the railroad track beyond. The nearest residence lies on the far side of the road and is occupied by W. R. Caminoni, a hatter, who married Mrs. Beekman Townsend's sister. It is fully 250 yards away from the scene of the burglary.

On Wednesday night the four women went to bed as usual shortly after 10 o'clock, leaving the basket of flat silver on the small table outside the front bedroom door on the second floor, where a kerosene night lamp was placed. There were no dogs in the house, as the family had lived there so long that they had lost all fear of robbers.

About half an hour after midnight Miss Bessie Townsend, who was sleeping in the front room with her mother, woke up. The bedroom door was open. close beside the bed, and the light from the lamp shone dimly on its foot, so that any one entering could easily be seen.

Suddenly the young woman saw a head appear around the door, and for a second she thought it might be her friend Kitty coming to speak to her. Then the form of a tall masked man came into view, and with a loud cry of "Help, thieves, Kitty, Ada, come quick!" Miss Townsend sprang out of bed and grappled with the robber. In the meantime Mrs. Townsend, who is more than 75 years old, was aroused by her daughter's cries and got out of bed and to the front window, which she threw open and called to the neighbors for help.

A Desperate Struggle.

In the meantime Bessie and the robber were fiercely struggling at the bedside, he trying to get away and she desperately endeavoring to hold him. Four times the robber struck her over the head with a piece of iron he carried in his hand, but the young woman would not let go, although the blood trickled down her face.

At this juncture Miss Horsley rushed in to the room. She was noted as an athlete in her college days, and jumped on the man, knocking him clean over on the bed. In his efforts to free himself from the women the mask, which was shaped square, like a pillow case, with two slits in it, shifted around so that he could not see, and in desperation he tore it from his head.

While this was going on, Mrs. Townsend, finding that there was no chance of help from the outside, took down a rusty old double-barreled shotgun from the wall, where it had been placed years ago, but it was too heavy for the aged woman to handle. There was also danger of hitting her daughter or her friend, as they were struggling with the unmasked robber.

Just then the youngest daughter, Ada, who slept in a room furthest away from her mother's, rushed into the room. By this time the burglar had managed to regain his feet, and was standing on the bed, struggling with the two young women.

He looked like a giant to Ada Townsend as she stood on the floor, but without any hesitation she leaped on the bed and went to the aid of the other two. At the same moment the robber made a leap to the floor and half out through the open doorway, dragging his would-be captors with him. To free himself he struck Miss Horlsey a violent blow on the head. It stunned her and she fell, the burglar rolling over her with the two other women on top of him.

Shouts could now be heard from the road that help was coming, and when he found that it was impossible for him to get clear, the robber suddenly drew a knife and attempted to stab Bessie Townsend with it. Half dazed as she was from the blow on the head, Miss Horsley realized her friend's danger, and made an upward spring, seizing the knife, which was double edged, in her two hands.

The blod ran down her arme to the floor until she became quite faint, and the robber finally wrenched himself away. He knocked the lamp off the table, smashing the glass globe, and stamping out the flame with his feet. Then hurling aside the exhausted, hysterical women, he sped down the stairs and out through the open front door, smashing the screen door in his flight.

Telephone Wires Cut.

When Mrs. Townsend tried to ring the telephone to call the police and the family physician to come and save the heroic Kitty from bleeding to death she discovered that the wire had been cut and all outside aid cut off. At that moment two young men, Alfred Copeland and David Malone, who had heard the shouts of the women as they were returning from a dance, came up to the house to ask what was wrong.

"Don't come in, he will kill you," shouted Mrs. Townsend, who supposed the robber was still in the house. "Run for Heaven's sake to Mr. Caminoni's house and tell him to telephone for the police and a doctor. There is a woman bleeding to death here."

The young men ran down the grassy slope and floundered through the water and slime of the millpond of the house, where they found Mr. Caminoni waiting with a gun in his hand to receive them. Fortunately he did not fire at them, and after matters had been hastily explained he gave Copeland the revolver and a lantern to Malone and instructed them to hurry back to the Townsend house, while he telephoned for help.

On their return to the house they found Miss Horsley lying unconscious in a pool of blood among the broken glass of the lamp on the landing. Miss Bessie Townsend was insensible on the bed and the mother and other daughter were too dazed to help either of them.

The young men stanched the wounds on Miss Horsley's hands, arms, and head until the arrival of Dr. I. F. Barnes, who got there half an hour later. On examination he decided that she would have to go to the hospital at once, and he telephoned to Dr. Niesley at Nassau to come and take the young woman to the hospital at Mineola.

Bessie Townsend had received four cuts on the head that went clean to the bone. One was on top, one in the centre of the forehead from the eyes to the hair, and two on the right side near the top. After having her wounds dressed she decided to stay at home with her mother, and was put to bed by her sister, Ada, who had escaped with nothing more serious than bruises on the body from blows that the robber gave her with the iron bar he carried. Mrs. Townsend was prostrated with the shock.

When the bedroom where the principal struggle took place was examined later by W. E. Hults, Under Sheriff of the county, with Charles Townsend, the town constable, they found that the thief in his hurry had left behind him on the bed his mask, made of faded blue muslin; a tan-colored Fedora hat without any name or mark inside, a bar of iron twelve inches long and rusty, like an old railroad spike, with one end turned up; a fountain pen and pencils, and a brown bone coat button, which had been torn off in the struggle with the women.

Description of the Robber.

Ada Townsend said that Miss Horsley, who saw the man closer than any one else before the lamp was put out, said he was tall, slender, and muscular, with fair hair and complexion and blue eyes.

"I feel sure that his face must be marked," she said, "because Miss Horsley, who is athletic, punched him hard in the face several times, and we all pummelled him as hard as we could with out bare fists. I think that he must have been a stranger, because if he had known the house it is not likely that he would have entered mother's room when he could easily have taken the silver away that was outside on the table by the lamp without waking any of us."

The robber entered by the rear kitchen window after trying to pry open the drawing room and dining room windows in front of the house. In order not to be disturbed he had also climbed a maple tree about forty feet away from the veranda in front and cut the telephone and electric light wires that led to it from the street.

Preparations for flight had been made by leaving the front door open, but he had omitted to fasten the screen door back and had to crash through it in his flight.

In the meantime Miss Horsley had been conveyed to the hospital at Mineola in an automobile, and on examination it was found that she had a severe wound on her left arm and the thumb on each hand was nearly severed. The tendons and small veins had been cut, but fortunately not the main arteries. The upper parts of the fingers of both hands were cut where she had grasped the keen double-edged blade of the robber's knife.

She was put under ether and operated on in the hospital at 9 o'clock this morning, and Robert F. Cox, her brother-in-law, with whom she lives at Media, who is also here on a visit with friends, said that the surgeons believed she would have the use of her left hand within a week. The healing of the right hand will take longer, as the wound is of a serious nature, they said.

Oyster Bay Excited.

The attack on the women caused great excitement in Oyster Bay, and Under Sheriff Hults went around in his automobile making inquiries in the neighborhood. It is believed that the robber may have been one of a gang of Italian laborers who have been working on the Long Island Railroad tracks for the last week.

There were no servants in the Townsend home at night, as they slept in the Mill house, about 250 yards away. Up till Wednesday of last week there was a caretaker, the husband of one of the maids, who did odd jobs in Oyster Bay in daytime and slept in the house at night.

This man and his wife left suddenly and went away to Williamsburg, without even informing the latter's mother, who lives here. County Detective Freeman will hunt him up and ascertain if he or his wife can throw any light on the case. Under Sheriff Hults said to-night that he believed the man was a German.

The Beekman Townsends are well known in Oyster Bay, where they have lived for several generations and have relatives in other parts of Long Island. S. S. Townsend, a descendant of Polly Townsend, the belle of Oyster Bay in Colonial days, is a cousin of Beekman Townsend, who died four months ago.

The Townsends leased the house for the Summer and were to have gone to the Catskills next Monday.

Two Men Arrested for Middletown Job After a Fight with Police.

After a hard fight, in which Detectives Oppenheim, Collins, and Dowling of Headquarters had their hands full, they arrested last night in his home in Union Hill, N. J., William Burke, who, they say, is known as "Yulle" Burke, and is a companion of the Riley brothers, known as notorious safe blowers, and of "Big Bill" Mason, said to be a bank burglar, also. Burke was arrested for the police of Middletown, N. Y., where he is wanted for trying to blow open a safe there two weeks ago. Tom Riley was with Burke and was arrested also.

A policeman got a good look at the safe burglars that night, and they shot at them when discovered, the bullet passing through the policeman's hat. The burglars escaped. Inspector McCafferty was called upon, and sent Burke's picture to Middletown on the suspicion that he might be one of the men wanted. According to the New York police, the Middletown policeman identified the picture as that of the man who fired the shot.

Burke, according to Inspector McCafferty, was a pal of Harry Carlton, known as "Handsome Harry," who, in October, 1888, shot and killed Policeman Brennan at Thirty-first Street and Third Avenue. He was hanged for the crime.

BIG CONTRACTORS IN RECEIVER'S HANDS

CONCERNS ARE IDENTICAL

John B. McDonald a Creditor to the Extent of $75,000—Assets and Liabilities Not Known.

A stir was caused among builders in this city late yesterday afternoon by the announcement that Supreme Court Justice Guy had appointed Henry K. S. Williams receiver for the John Peirce Company and William Bradley & Son, Incorporated, two of the largest and most important cut stone contractors in the country. The management of both concerns is identical.

No figures regarding the liabilities and assets of the concerns were obtainable last night, but it was said that the step taken was caused through the inability of both to make collections. The hope is expressed that arrangements will soon be perfected which will permit of the discharge of the receiver. In the meantime all important work on hand will go on.

The application for the receiver in the case of the John Peirce Company was made by John B. McDonald on his own behalf as a creditor for $75,000. Mr. McDonald said he also represented other creditors. In the case of the William Bradley concern, the application was made by Pisani Brothers of Astoria, L. I., who are creditors to the extent of $6,273.

The officials of both companies are the same, with the exception of the President. Edward F. Giberson is President of the Bradley company, Peter A. Gage Secretary, Henry S. Lanpher, Treasurer, with Giberson, Gage, Lanpher, Walter Roberts, and Emil Diebitsch as Directors. The same officials stand in the Peirce concern, with the exception that John Peirce is President of the concern.

The Peirce Company was incorporated on Jan. 30, 1905, with an authorized capital of $1,250,000. It took over the assets of John Peirce, who was conducting probably the foremost stone contracting business in the country. He had been established for twenty-five years. Among some of the large contracts handled by this concern were the Hall of Records, the new Custom House, anchorage for the Manhattan Bridge, the Interborough power house, and the Chicago Post Office. Contracts on hand include the Grand Central terminal and the New York Public Library.

Mr. Gage, Secretary of both companies, told a TIMES reporter last night that the temporary financial trouble was due to the inability to collect outstanding amounts. He said that at the present he could not give figures, but that probably to-day a statement of the position of the concerns might be given out. He expressed the belief that the trouble would be tided over, and also said he did not think the appointment of a receiver would affect in any way the completion of contracts now in hand. The weekly wage account of the concerns, he said, amounted to about $15,000.

The Peirce Company was a bidder for a large contract on the Ashokan Dam, Catskill water supply, but its bid was rejected by the Water Supply Board in November, 1907. This rejection caused considerable comment at the time.

The William Bradley & Son firm was incorporated in May, 1902, with a capital of $100,000. It took over the business of William Bradley & Son of Brooklyn, which was established in 1867. The company is controlled by the Peirce interests, the Bradleys having retired from business some years ago. It has filled contracts for prominent buildings, and was a bidder for a part of the Fourth Avenue Brooklyn Subway. Last April it got a contract from the Board of Water Supply for tunnels through Turkey Mountain and Croton Lake. The price was $975,694.

O'Brien, Boardman, Platt & Littleton, representing certain creditors of the two concerns, issued this statement yesterday on the appointment of the receiver:

"The Supreme Court, upon the application of creditors represented by O'Brien, Boardman, Platt & Littleton, but on consent of the John Peirce Company and William Bradley & Son, incorporated, has appointed Henry K. S. Williams of the firm of Ichabod T. Williams & Sons, receiver of the property of these corporations.

"A large business has been done by both corporations, and many important and profitable contracts are now in course of execution by them. The weekly payrolls of these corporations are very large. Unexpected delays in making collections, due to various causes, have made it difficult for these corporations to meet their obligations at maturity. Important equities in real estate and other assets furnish ample protection against any ultimate loss by the creditors of either corporation.

"The court has been asked to appoint a receiver to protect the companies against possible defaults upon contracts now in course of execution, to prevent unjust priority and preferences, and to preserve the property and assets of the corporations for the benefit of all concerned.

"It is confidently expected that the creditors will approve of the action taken in their interest, and that within a short time financial arrangements can be made which will permit the discharge of the receiver. In the meantime the court will be asked to authorize the receiver to proceed with the execution of pending profitable work."

The office of both concerns is at 90 West Street. Mr. Williams was directed to give a bond of $100,000 in each case.

TWAIN'S FOOTNOTE LOST.

Wrote One, He Says, Crediting Author and Publisher of Borrowed Matter.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 10.—Referring to the charges of plagiarism, in connection with his book, "Is Shakespeare Dead?" Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) to-day said:

"In writing my book I took the liberty of using large extracts from Mr. Greenwood's book, 'The Shakespeare Problem Restated.' I made use of the extracts because of the great admiration which I have for that book, and with the full permission of the publishers. I added a foot note in which I gave full credit to both author and publishers. The book was put through the press in great haste, and somewhere, nobody seems to know where, the foot note was lost, probably in the composing room. That is the sum and substance of the whole story."

"But of course the John Lane Publishing Company of England, the publishers of Mr. Greenwood's book, are good advertisers. Now, one of Mark Twain's books, so they tell me, is considered worth while reading. I know, at any rate, that my books have always sold well. But to have a man like Mark Twain steal portions from another man's book makes that book something extraordinary.

"Messrs. Lane are well aware of this fact, and it is to be regretted that a mistake in the mechanical department of another publishing house should be made much of to accuse falsely one who has already won fame in the literary world and to put in a false light another who is the most modest and retiring of men."

NEW COUNTERFEIT SWINDLE.

Bogus Money Sent to Italy and Palmed Off on Departing Emigrants.

An investigation has been begun by the Immigration Bureau which it is hoped may disclose the identity of a band of Italian counterfeiters which, working in this country, is believed to manufacture bogus United States currency, which is sent to confederates in Italy, who exchange it with emigrating Italians for good Italian money.

The suspicion that such a band was operating in this country was occasioned by the discovery that many of the 814 steerage passengers on the Koenig Albert of the North German Lloyd Line, which reached here from Italy on Wednesday, had in their possession spurious United States half dollars.

These coins were offered by some of the Italians to peddlers who board the boats in Hoboken, N. J. All of the Koenig Albert's immigrants are now on Ellis Island, where a thorough investigation is being made.

$50 REWARD FOR HER DOG.

Mrs. Frank Freeman Has Lost a Faithful Companion.

Mrs. Frank M. Freeman of 37 West Fiftieth Street, widow of Gen. Freeman, is hoping through THE TIMES's Lost Column to get back her Pomeranian dog Jeanette, which escaped from her home yesterday afternoon. The dog is a small brown specimen weighing 4¼ pounds, has light brown spots over its eyes and a white tail. She is offering a reward of $50 for its return.

Jeanette has been Mrs. Freeman's constant companion during a recent illness and has grown greatly attached to her. Yesterday Mrs. Freeman attended a luncheon at Sherry's, and after her departure from the house the dog became restless. At 2:30 the laundress went to the kitchen door to receive some letters and Jeanette slipped out.

Mrs. Freeman thinks the dog must have missed her and sought to follow her.

HAT FIRMS STAND FIRM.

The Majority Not Affected by Danbury Firms' Treaty with the Union.

President Samuel Mundheim of the Associated Hat Manufacturers announced last evening that he had received the resignations of the fifteen firms in Danbury, Conn., and neighboring towns which broke away from the open-shop plan of the association on Monday and made an agreement with the union. The resignations are not effective until ninety days, as each firm is under a bond of $25,000 to give three months' notice of withdrawal.

"There is not the slightest sign of a break among the other members of the association," said Mr. Mundheim. "All the manufacturers who are holding out feel that they cannot now afford to give up the fight until the open shop wins."

PETROSINO SUSPECTS IN BLACK HAND BAND

Vicarrio and Marfisi, Prisoners, Both in Italy at the Time of the Murder.

PETROSINO ANGERED BAND

Suspected Men Returned to Ohio After Detective Was Slain—Petrosino Sought Blackmailers in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, June 10.—Out of the rounding up of the Ohio Black Hand may come the solution of the murder in Palermo, Sicily, of Lieut. Joseph Petrosino of the New York Detective Bureau. At least one of the men arrested was in Palermo at the time Petrosino was slain, and another in Italy. Lieut. Petrosino was called into a Black Hand case, in which he worked in this city and Pittsburg, shortly before he went to Sicily, and at that time was threatened with death if he persisted.

Chief Post Office Inspector Holmes was asked this evening whether any proof had been found connecting the Ohio Black Hand with the murder of Lieut. Petrosino. Mr. Holmes said he had no absolute proof that this gang actually had a hand in that murder, but he knew that Augustino Marfisi, who was arrested in Dennison, Ohio, yesterday, was in Palermo at the time of Petrosino's death and that Marfisi returned to America shortly after that murder. Marfisi's visit to Italy at that time might have been a mere coincidence, he said, but the gang of which Marfisi is a member was organized exactly like the Society of the Banana in Sicily.

Marfisi, according to Inspector Oldfield, is one of the most desperate of the orisoners. He was arrested after a desperate struggle, in which revolvers were used on both sides, though without effect. Before he left Dennison, six months ago, he had been preceded to Italy by Barney Bonete, a fruit dealer, who sold his store in Dennison at a sacrifice and fled to escape Black Hand vengeance. Boneti was murdered not long after his arrival in Italy. Marfisi returned from Italy about two months ago. He is said to have been the agent of the Lima blackmailers, who relayed the letters from the Marion headquarters demanding money from John Amicon.

Postal Inspector Oldfield is positive that the suspect, Collogero Vicarrio, arrested yesterday at Bellefontaine, was connected with Petrosino's murder. He says Vicarrio is known to have left for Italy about the time Petrosino was assassinated. Vicarrio spent some time in Italy and returned here.

It was reported last night that a mob of Italians planned to storm the frail structure used for the jail at Dennison and rescue Marfisi. Deputies were at once placed around the jail and were kept on duty until late to-day, when Marfisi was taken to Canton to be arraigned.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 10.—With three members of the Italian Black Hand Society of Ohio still at large, postal officials regret the release on bonds of Sam Lima of Marion and Sevario Ventola of Columbus, who are regarded as the craftiest men in the organized body. Lima's bond was fixed in Toledo at $3,000 and Ventola's in Columbus at $5,000.

Now that Lima is out of prison the Inspectors believe that it will be difficult to find his father, his brother, and a third member of the society who fled from Marion when the first arrest was made. Lima returned to Marion to-day, and is reported to have sent word to his fugitive comrades by secret emissaries informing them of the plans to arrest them.

All the officers who have been at work in rounding up the Black Hand aggregation will go to Cleveland Saturday to confer with United States District Attorney Day. There all the evidence will be discussed and the contents of many of the letters found in possession of the prisoners will be canvassed.

It is said that some of these letters have given to Federal officers clues to other bands of Italian blackmailers in various States. From this evidence, it is predicted, before many months other groups of Black Hand operatives will be run to earth in different places.

CURTISS'S AEROPLANE READY.

New Machine for Tests Here Weighs Only 550 Pounds.

Glenn H. Curtiss's new aeroplane, the first one to be built at the Hammondsport, N. Y., factory since the incorporation of the Herring-Curtiss Company, is expected to be delivered to the Aeronautic Society at its Morris Park grounds tomorrow.

A letter from Mr. Curtiss was read at the meeting of the society last night at the Automobile Club of America, in West Fifty-fourth Street, in which Mr. Curtiss said he wished to make one more trial flight, but if everything worked satisfactorily he hoped to have the machine packed up for shipment last night.

The new aeroplane is much ligher than the Silver Dart and the Wright machines. It weighs hardly about 550 pounds. It is 29 feet wide, the two planes being 4½ feet deep, with a supporting surface of 260 square feet. A horizontal rudder in front consists of a single plane of 24 square feet, and there is a smaller vertical rudder in the rear. The motor is a four-cylinder 30 horse power water-cooled engine, capable of giving from 1,800 to 2,000 revolutions a minute.

The Aeronautic Society's public exhibition, it was stated last night, will probably be either on June 19 or 26.

Distinctive Summer Suits for Men whose tastes incline to the fastidious. At $15 to $43.

Were this not a period of ceaseless effort for betterment, the thousand and one improved conditions of present-day life would not be. Contentment means stagnation.

There have been many opportunities for improving the tone of men's wearing apparel designed for immediate service. Some makers of men's clothes have recognized those opportunities and profited by them. We doubt, however, if any have gone to greater lengths than ourselves to place ready-for-service clothes upon a plane so high that not even the man of the utmost nicety of judgment can find in garments of our creation aught deserving criticism.

Yet with all that we can—and do—give of quality, elegance and distinction, we content ourselves with but a modest profit.

To charge you more for the many extra expenses in the making of a garment—the better linings, the finer finishing, the more time spent upon the making—would defeat our intention to give you the best at no advance in cost.

And it is possible for us to carry out our intention only because there is no "middle" profit to meet. Our own designers and tailormen create every garment we sell—direct from workrooms to wearer.

CHAUCHARD FUNERAL JEERED AND HISSED

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 10.—Paris was the scene to-day of the most extraordinary funeral witnessed in modern times. As the pompous cortège carrying the body of H. A. Chauchard to its grave passed through the streets, half a million people, forgetting their habitual attitude in the presence of the dead, watched it like a circus parade.

Some ironically cheered the body, and some hissed. At the Church of the Madeleine thousands of hooligans mingled with the official mourners, robbed the bier and the accompanying cars of flowers, and tossed them about.

There was general disorder along the whole line of march. The police and military were good natured and took little care to preserve the dignity of the occasion which the rich man had planned with such care. By common consent all participating joined in the hilarity.

PARIS, June 10.—There was almost a riot to-day at the funeral of H. A. Chauchard, late wealthy merchant, who left millions to a woman friend and little to charity. Crowds along the line of the procession were so dense that many women and children were hurt in the crush.

The demonstration took place after the services at the Church of the Madeleine and as the procession passed through the working districts near the Place de la Bastille and the Place de la République on its way to the cemetery. Here the occasion became more like a fête than a funeral. The crowds laughed, many persons indulged in coarse jests, and some of the demonstrators were so hostile that the police were compelled to make a number of arrests. At several places the crowd broke through the police lines and invaded the procession, which made its way with great difficulty.

The demonstration increased when the cortége arrived at the Père La Chaise Cemetery, but the police finally were successful in driving back the mob, and the coffin was placed in a magnificent sepulchre, crowned with a bust of the deceased.

Former President Loubet, who accompanied the remains on foot, was frequently acclaimed.

The hostile demonstration was due to feeling, stirred up by the Socialist newspapers, against M. Chauchard's disposition of his estate. He was the proprietor of the Magasins du Louvre, the well-known department store, near the Palais Royal, and died on June 4, leaving a vast fortune. The Socialists have been contrasting M. Chauchard's limited legacies to charities with those of Mme. Boucicault, the widow of the proprietor of the Bon Marché stores, who a dozen years ago left her entire fortune of $20,000,000 to the store employes and to religious and charitable institutions, while M. Chauchard left from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 to Mme. Boursin, who had been his close friend for something like thirty years.

Georges Leygues, who inherited $3,000,000 from M. Chauchard, has announced the transfer of $200,000 of this money to the pension fund for former members of the Chamber of Deputies.

While there is some public sympathy for the employes of the late M. Chauchard, who believed that they would be the principal beneficiaries, the chief basis of criticism is the enormous legacy to M. Leygues, who, while a member of the Cabinet, recommended M. Chauchard for the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor. a bequest of $20,000 was made to the Secretary of the Legion of Honor, but he declined to accept it. Parliamentary circles manifest opposition to the acceptance of M. Leygues's donation of $200,000 to the Deputies' Pension Fund.

Not for a long time has Paris witnessed such a spectacle of pomp and magnificence as to-day's funeral. It was what the Parisians call a "gay" funeral, and they enjoyed it rather as a spectacle than as a tribute.

The services at the Madeleine were imposing, and some of the most celebrated voices in France sang in the choruses. The church was besieged and it is estimated that considerably more than half a million people crowded the streets along which the funeral procession was to take its way. While M. Chauchard's friends brought about the abandonment of the gorgeous Louis XV. cavalcade that he had planned, the obsequies were carried out on a truly royal scale.

Starting from his residence in the Rue Velasquez, where the body has been lying in state, the imposing procession, escorted by a squadron of Cuirassiers and several battalions of infantry, literally forced its way through the streets to the Madeleine. The hearse, which was drawn by six black horses caparisoned in the trappings of mourning, was preceded by three funeral cars banked high with the rarest flowers and by 3,000 employes of the Louvre store.

The group of mourners behind the hearse consisted chiefly of beneficiaries under the will of M. Chauchard, and his servants. A single carriage with close-drawn curtains was occupied by Mme. Boursin.

A dozen persons residing in the provinces are now claiming relationship with M. Chauchard and threaten to contest his will. Several establishments, like the Pasteur Institute and a literary association, to which M. Chauchard made annual contributions, but which were ignored in the will, also are discontented, and it is rumored that they will allege undue influence, in an effort to have the will set aside.

COMMONS APPROVE BUDGET.

Second Reading of Finance Bill Passed, 366 to 209.

LONDON, June 10.—The House of Commons to-night by a vote of 366 to 209 passed the second reading of the Finance bill. The Nationalists opposed it.

The principle of the budget has thus been accepted, but the discussion of the details in committee is likely to be prolonged until Autumn.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

FORT DE FRANCE, Martinique, June 10.—The sum of $14,500 has been stolen from the Treasury of the local Government. The authorities are investigating.

AMOY, June 10.—There was a small riot yesterday during a religious celebration at the village of Moachow between soldiers and townspeople. One soldier was killed and three were wounded.

WILLEMSTAD, Curacao, June 10.—President Gomez of Venezuela has said he would allow Celestino Castro, brother of the deposed President of the republic, to return to Venezuela provided he would turn over to the Government the 6,000 rifles he has gathered together on Colombian territory.

BERLIN, June 10.—Emperor William, as King of Prussia, issued to-day a decree countersigned by the members of the Crown Council appointing a commission to report upon the decentralization and simplification of the existing system of administration. The present methods are cumbersome and slow, especially in the provinces, because of the necessity of referring a great many questions to Berlin.

BEZIERS, France, June 10.—A Cingalese Prince, Fernando Primier, died on a railroad train here to-day while on his way to Lourdes in the hope of gaining relief at the shrine there from the suffering caused by an incurable malady.

SANTANDER, Spain, June 10.—Ex-President Castro of Venezuela and his wife are quietly living in a villa near here. There is no evidence that he is planning to assist financially a rumored fillibustering expedition.

TAFT TALKS TO CATHOLICS.

There Should Be No Distinctions in Elections Because of Religious Beliefs.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—That complete Church emulation is a good thing, and that there should be in this country "no invidious distinctions in elections because of religious beliefs," were the keynotes of the address made to-night by President Taft before the congress of Roman Catholic missionaries now in session in this city.

After being introduced by Father Doyle, who referred to the President, quoting another, as the "great harmonizer," Mr. Taft, who had been applauded loudly as he entered the hall, was greeted by another outburst of applause.

He spoke principally of the work of settling in the Philippines the difficulties caused by the close relationship there of Church and Government. He expressed the opinion that in the end the Church would be strengthened by the change there, "as freedom and toleration and the complete separation of Church and State have strengthened the Church in this country."

Referring to the final settlement of the Church problems in the Philippines, he declared that few extremists in this country had found any exception thereto.

"But I venture to say," added the President, "that forty years ago it would have sunk any Administration, which only goes to show that this country is broad enough for all denominations to work together for the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and for all of us to live here as American citizens, and that we should make no invidious distinctions in elections because of religious beliefs."

WOMAN HURT BY RUNAWAY.

They Were Gossiping on a Street Corner When Horse Rushed Upon Them.

Two women, while conversing at the northwest corner of Forty-third Street and Eighth Avenue, late yesterday afternoon, were run down by a runaway horse. One of them, Mrs. Bertha Kenyon, 53 years old, a widow of 219 West Forty-second Street, suffered a bad scalp wound, a possible fracture of her skull, and contusions of her legs. The other, Mrs. Mary Owens of 176 West 115th Street, was struck by a lamppost which the horse kicked over, but escaped with bruises. Mrs. Kenyon was taken to Flower Hospital; Mrs. Owens went home.

John Jones, 21 years old, of 582 Tenth Avenue, driver of the wagon drawn by the runaway horse, was locked up in the West Forty-seventh Street Station. He is employed by Acker, Merrall & Condit in the firm's store at 135 West Forty-second Street. The delivery entrance of the store is in Forty-third Street. Jones was on the delivery platform and his helper, Joseph Chris, was holding the bridle of the horse when it bolted and dashed across Times Square.

The two women were gossiping so intently on the Eighth Avenue corner that they did not see the runaway coming until the horse ran up on the sidewalk and knocked over the lamp post, the fragments of which fell on Mrs. Owens.

Mrs. Kenyon, trying desperately to get out of the way, slipped and fell. Her worst injury was due to the fall. The wagon wheels passed over her legs, but did not break them.

FINE DAY IN SIGHT!

Maybe Several Days—The Weather Man Sees Sunshine a-Coming.

The Weather Man came out of the dumps last night and began to talk optimistically.

"It looks as though these rare, rainy June days were over," he said. "There has been a general clearing of weather conditions in the West, and all the charts point to fine weather here to-morrow and Saturday. Further than that we cannot foretell right now, but it looks as though we are over the disagreeable April weather we have been having out of season."

Not only will there be no rain, the Weather Forecaster promised, but to-day and to-morrow ought to be comfortably warm, with brisk western breezes.

HEIRS HAVE LAWYER HELD.

Claimaints to Alleged Harlem Estate Say Ruggles Didn't Earn Fees.

The investigation which the 170 heirs of the Mercer-Townley estate have been conducting as to their title to a large and not quite clearly defined tract of land in Harlem came to something of an anticlimax yesterday when M. Alvin Ruggles, a lawyer well known in Indianapolis, Ind.; Dayton, Ohio, and many cities of the Middle West, was arrested at his office, 5 Beekman Street, charged with having obtained a hundred-dollar fee from the husband of one of the heirs without having done anything to earn it.

MRS. ANTONIO RUIZ A SUICIDE IN LONDON

Was Mentioned in Connection with the Divorce Case of Alfred G. Vanderbilt.

NEWS OF DEATH SUPPRESSED.

Had Been Rumored Here, but Not Confirmed—Inquest Held Three Weeks Ago—Divorced Last Summer.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 10.—Mrs. Agnes Ruiz, the former actress, whose name was mentioned in connection with the divorce case of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, was found shot to death in bed in her house in Grosvenor Street on May 16, evidently by her own hand. She had lived a very secluded life in London, practically her only caller being Mr. Vanderbilt, and at the inquest it developed that she had become depressed when his visits ceased.

The facts brought out at the inquest were suppressed in some manner, and it did not become definitely known until to-day that Mrs. Ruiz was dead. This feature of the case is being investigated.

Mr. Vanderbilt took part to-day in the meet of the Coaching Club, driving his famous team of grays, but for some time recently it had been noticeable that he had been giving less attention than usual to his favorite pursuits and much surprise has been expressed at his rare visits to the International Horse Show at Olympia.

Mrs. Ruiz's death was reported in the New York papers of May 29, but the story could not be confirmed from London.

Mrs. Ruiz was the daughter of a Missouri farmer named O'Brien. For several years she appeared on the stage under the name of Ruth Hilton, and it was not until some months after her marriage, it is said, that even her husband knew that this was not her right name. Then he was furious, asserting that he had been deceived.

She came into prominence in this city in September, 1903, through her marriage to Don Antonio A. Ruiz y Olivares, attaché of the Cuban Legation at Washington. They toured abroad for awhile, and later settled down in Washington. Later Mrs. Ruiz came to this city, where she soon became well known in certain circles as an accomplished horsewoman, and was often seen about the riding academies. She spent much time also in riding or driving in Central Park, always with fine horses.

Her acquaintance with Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt is said to date from an act of courtesy on his part one morning in Central Park, when he found her tugging helplessly at an obstinate saddle buckle. He asked her if he might assist her, and the offer was accepted.

Mrs. Ruiz separated from her husband three years after their marriage. She lived in quiet but excellent style in a richly appointed apartment, at 596 Lexington Avenue, apparently entertaining little, but often driving fine horses, or spinning along in a high-power automobile of the latest type.

For a considerable period, however, Mrs. Ruiz's name did not appear in the newspapers, the occasion finally being furnished by the suit for divorce which Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt brought against Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. Just before this suit was started Harry Brenchley, Mr. Vanderbilt's stable manager, who afterward married the divorced wife of Alfred S. Dieterich, selected for Mrs. Ruiz an automobile which cost $11,000.

Señor Ruiz, following the separation from his wife, resigned his diplomatic post, and last Summer he sued for a divorce, which was granted by Judge Tompkins of White Plains. He lives at the Waldorf-Astoria.

FRANCIS JOSEPH RECOVERED.

Walks Bareheaded in Street Pageant Under Hot Sun.

VIENNA, June 10.—Emperor Francis Joseph took part to-day in the customary Corpus Christi procession for the first time since his recent illness. He appeared in the street pageant surrounded by Archdukes and high dignitaries of the Church, and walked bare-headed through the streets of the city in the hot sun from the Hofburg to St. Stephen's Cathedral.

He appeared to be in excellent health, and bore the fatiguing ceremony very well. The crowds along the line of march gave him an enthusiastic greeting.

PLEA IN VAIN, ENDS LIFE.

Failing in a last attempt to win back his wife, who had deserted him for another, Albert Ullricks of 1,126 Bloomfield Street, Hoboken, took cyanide of potassium in front of Police Headquarters in Orange, N. J., early yesterday morning, and died before medical assistance came.

Mrs. Ullricks, who left her home only a few days ago and got employment in a factory in Orange, was living at 43 William Street, just around the corner from the spot where Ullricks took the poison. She was arrested, and with her was taken Frank Garness, a former boarder at the Ullricks home in Hoboken. Both were charged with disorderly conduct.

Ullricks went to the house and pleaded with his wife to go back to Hoboken with him. It was nearly 2 o'clock in the morning when he left with the threat to end his life. The woman followed, and was at his side when he took the poison. She notified the police. When she returned home she found the police there.

The Ullrickses had one son, and Ullricks left a letter in his pocket forgiving his wife, and asking her forgiveness, and admonishing her to be good to the boy.

A charge of cruelty made against Ullricks by his wife was tried before Recorded McGovern in Hoboken on Tuesday. Mrs. Ullricks withdrew the complaint on condition that her husband would not follow or annoy her.

Ullricks first appeared in Orange last Saturday, then looking for his wife. Before that Garness had sought a permit to carry a revolver, but was refused. He said he came from South Dakota, where men were in the habit of defending themselves. The police did not know who he was at the time.

NO WAR TAX FOR TRUST COS.

Judge Lacombe Decides That They Are Not Subject to an Old Levy.

Judge Lacombe of the United States Circuit Court rendered decisions yesterday in the actions brought by the Central Trust and the Farmers' Loan and Trust Companies against Charles H. Treat, as Collector of Internal Revenue, to recover war taxes levied under Section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1898, which were paid under protest. The decisions are in favor of the trust companies. The only point in dispute was whether the war tax was payable on the accumulated and undivided profits resulting from the conducting of the business of the corporations for many years.

Deciding in favor of the Central Trust Company, the action being similar in all respects excepting the amount involved to the suit brought by the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Judge Lacombe said:

"It will be observed that the capital and surplus, which is subjected to the tax, is that which is used or employed by the bankers. The evidence shows that the entire amount of the undivided profits before, during, and at the end of the fiscal year was invested in municipal and railway bonds, and in the stocks of corporations, and was not in any sense employed in the business of banking, although the ownership of the large amount of securities available to make good losses in any of the enterprises which the corporation was conducting naturally increased its credit generally."

WIFE'S LOVE VALUED AT $400.

Jury Returns a Verdict for That Sum in a $20,000 Damage Suit.

PATERSON, N. J., June 10.—After being locked up all night a jury gave Oscar K. Inderlied to-day a verdict for $400 in his suit to recover $20,000 from Dr. Victor E. Bullen for the alienation of the affections of his wife and breaking up of his home. The case was on trial for two days before Judge Black.

Inderlied is employed in the auditor's department of the Erie Railroad. Dr. Bullen is his family physician. Inderlied some months ago announced that he was going to Pennsylvania. Instead he returned to his home with a neighbor. They entered his house and found the physician there. Mrs. Inderlied prevented her husband from shooting the physician. Dr. Bullen is married. The Inderlieds were married in 1903.

Dr. Bullen did not take the stand in his own defense, and no witnesses were called in his behalf.

1,000 Invited to Metz Dinner July 8.

The Brooklyn Democratic Club will give a dinner to Controller Metz at the Brighton Beach Hotel on the evening of July 8, just before he sails for Europe for his vacation. The entire hotel has been engaged, and more than 1,000 guests are expected to be present, making the affair one of the largest dinners ever given in Brooklyn.

MORE WITNESSES FOR DUFFY.

Mayor Not Likely to Decide the Case Till Late Next Week.

Mayor McClellan announced yesterday that he will probably not render his decision in the Duffy case until the latter part of next week. The amount of testimony already taken is voluminous, and more witnesses are still to be heard.

Several additional "character witnesses" appeared before the Mayor yesterday, but he said he did not care to discuss their statements. It is not known who the other witnesses are who have been summoned. The Mayor declared that he has not yet heard from Gen. Bingham on the charges, or asked him for an explanation.

The Mayor will be busy to-day with the Board of Estimate and other matters and usually goes to Princeton on Friday night or early Saturday morning. On Tuesday he is scheduled to speak at the commencement exercises of the Lawrenceville School, and will so be unable to examine the complete compilation of the testimony until well into the week.

UPHOLDS PISER WILL.

First Wife Fails to Break It—$25,000 Estate to Second Wife.

The contest over the will of Abraham Piser, who fifteen years ago was a well-known furniture dealer in the Bronx, brought by his first wife, Mrs. Annie Piser of 609 West 115th Street, who divorced him in 1888, was decided by Surrogate Cohalan yesterday. The will, dated May 29, 1908, leaving all of his estate, about $25,000, to his second wife, Mrs. Susie E. Piser of 762 Union Avenue, the Bronx, was upheld.

Mr. Piser's first wife sought to break the will in behalf of herself and their four children on the ground of undue influence, that her divorced husband was of intemperate habits at the time the will was executed, and that she and the children should have had consideration.

Alfred Steckler, counsel for Mrs. Susie Piser, produced the subscribing witness to the will, together with the attorney who drew it, all of whose testimony was to the effect that Mr. Piser was competent at the time he signed it, and that his habits had been temperate for ten years previous.

KIDNAPPERS SNATCH A BOY IN BROAD DAY

Father Thinks He Was Grabbed Up and Whisked Away in an Auto.

RANSOM OF $500 DEMANDED

Police Say the Letter Was the Work of the Black Hand—All Trace of the Lad Lost.

Although Peter Callandra, the five-year-old son of John Callandra of 183 Floyd Street, Williamsburg, was kidnapped in daylight last Sunday near his home, the police, up to last night, had been unable to find any trace either of the boy or the kidnappers.

Capt. Buchanan of the Vernon Avenue Police Station, who has put two detectives at work on the case, told a TIMES reporter last night that he was making every effort to find the kidnappers, but that they appeared to have covered up their tracks.

Besides Capt. Buchanan's detectives, two others from the Italian bureau in Brooklyn are working in the Italian colonies of Brooklyn and Manhattan. While the detectives are exhausting every means to find the boy, his mother is in a precarious condition under the care of Dr. Charles Baconi. She has not slept since her boy was stolen.

The boy's father, a tailor, has given up work, for the time, to aid the detectives in running down the kidnappers. He might have had his boy with him now had he complied with a demand made by the kidnappers to pay $500. A letter with this demand reached him on Monday night. It ordered him to take $500 to a spot in the Bronx, which was designated. Instead of doing this, Callandra took the letter to the police.

"I won't pay a cent to any kidnapper," declared the boy's father to the detectives. "If I get my hands on the men who did this there won't be any chance for you to arrest them. I want to find my boy, but I'll not give the kidnappers any money."

Callandra did not take the letter to the police until after the time named for the money to be taken to the Bronx. They would have gone with him and laid a trap for the kidnappers, but Callandra failed to tell them of the letter until twenty-four hours after he had got it.

Young Callandra was kidnapped at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon while he was on his way to the home of his aunt, who lives in Park Avenue, two blocks from his home. His mother had told him to return by 6 o'clock.

Last Seen of the Boy.

Dressed in a new gray suit and wearing a straw hat, the boy started for his aunt's home. One of his chums saw him turn the corner of Tompkins Avenue, and that is the last seen of him by any one who knew him.

It was not until 6:30 o'clock, when the boy did not return home, that his mother began to worry about him. Some time later the father went to the home of the aunt, and was told that the boy had not been there.

The father started a search of the neighborhood, but got not a trace of the boy. All night long he walked the streets looking for the boy. It was not until after daybreak on Monday that he went to the Vernon Avenue Police Station. Then Capt. Buchanan started the police machinery. The detectives could make nothing of the mystery until after Callandra brought them the letter. Exactly what this letter said and how it was signed the police will not say.

One of the detectives on the case told THE TIMES reporter that the letter seemed to have been written at the instigation of the Black Hand. It was imperative in tone, he said, and there was a hint that if Callandra did not produce the money demanded harm might come to his boy.

The writer, the police say, evidently knew that Callandra had saved some money, and furthermore, that his savings were slender. Through thrifty habits Callandra has put a trifle more than $500 in the bank. He told the police he would willingly spend all he had to get his boy back, but would not give it to the kidnappers.

Letter Mailed in the City.

The police have the envelope in which the letter demanding money was sent, but they will not tell where it was mailed. Callandra did not notice particularly, he said, but thought it was somewhere in the city.

This was the second letter Callandra had received with threats about his boy. A year ago, he told the police, a poorly written note was left at his door. In it the writer told him that he would have to mail $100 to an address that was mentioned or his boy would be stolen. Callandra thought it was a joke. He tore up the letter and dismissed the incident from his mind. He did not hear anything further from it.

"My boy told me two weeks ago that he had met a gypsy on the street," said Callandra yesterday. "The gypsy told him he was a fine little fellow and wanted him to go away. Peter began crying and some people stopped to see what was the matter. The gypsy went away and then Peter came home.

"I told Peter to be careful who he talked to on the street after that, and he promised that he would. He was a smart boy and I always felt that he could take care of himself. That makes me think that he must have been stolen when no one was in the street near him, for Peter must have fought and tried to shout."

It is the belief of Peter's father that the boy was stolen by men who came to the neighborhood in an automobile. He thinks they waited their chance, snatched the boy up, and whisked him away in the auto before the lad knew what was going on.

Peter has a 3-year-old brother, John, and since the former's disappearance John has been crying his eyes out. When THE TIMES reporter called at the Callandra home yesterday afternoon John brushed away his tears for the moment and asked plaintively:

"Has you got my bruzzer?"

When the reporter replied that he did not know where to find the brother the boy put his hands to his face and sobbed harder than ever.

MUST PAY SALARY BUDGET.

Corporation Counsel Recommends That Brooklyn Court Increases Be Allowed.

Corporation Counsel Pendleton has advised the city to discontinue its objection to the increases in the salaries of the attendants and interpreters of the Kings County courts recommended for inclusion in the last budget, and the twenty-six men affected will in all probability shortly be credited with the raises, which aggregate about $9,000.

The increases for the three interpreters and twenty-three attendants run from $300 to $700 a year. The recommendations were made by Justices Fawcett and Dike of the Kings County Supreme Court at the time of the drawing up of the last budget, under the provision of the charter which says that county officers shall fix their own budget.

The Board of Estimate, however, refused to allow the increases, and the budget was made up without them being included in it. The matter was then taken to court, and Justice Jaycox issued a mandamus ordering the Controller to pay the money.

The case was then turned over to the Corporation Counsel, and he has recommended that the order be obeyed. It is feared that if the question was fought out to the highest court and finally decided against the city, serious complications might arise with other county officials.

C. M. SIEGEL IS SUED FOR A SEPARATION

SAYS HE WON'T PAY ALIMONY

Served with the Court Order, Siegel Says He Hasn't the Money and Will Go to Jail Before Paying It.

Through her counsel, Charles Pechner of 302 Broadway, Mrs. Charles M. Siegel, formerly Miss Lena Sperling, served her husband, Charles M. Siegel, the real estate operator and decorator, on Wednesday with an order issued by Justice Guy of the Supreme Court to pay her $25 a week alimony and $250 counsel fees pending an action for separation and the custody of her 2-year-old child, Helen. Mr. Siegel, on receiving the order, declared, according to his counsel, David Engel, that he had not so much money as that, and would rather go to jail than pay.

Mrs. Siegel, in her complaint, charges her husband with using abusive language to her and with threatening to kill her. She also charges him with sequestering some of their property so that she could not get at it, and with attentions to Irene George, an actress.

The complaint, which Mr. Siegel denies, further declares that Mr. Siegel never came in before midnight, and then admitted, according to the papers in the case, that he had taken other women to dinner and the theatre.

One morning early in May, according to Mrs. Siegel's counsel, his client went to the telephone to answer a call. A woman's voice asked for her husband, the lawyer says. Mrs. Siegel, pretending to be the maid, said Mr. Siegel was not in, but that she would take a message for him. The voice on the other end of the wire said: "No, never mind. I won't leave my name. It's all right."

"Well, won't you leave your number, then?" asked Mrs. Siegel, according to the lawyer. "Just tell him George called him up," the lawyer declares the voice answered, giving a telephone number.

Mrs. Siegel then hurried down to her lawyer. Mr. Pechner alleges that he found the number was that of the Ansonia Hotel. He called it, he alleges, asked for "George," and after some badinage engaged to come to a woman's apartment two days later.

According to the papers Mr. and Mrs. Siegel were married in 1902. Mrs. Siegel's affidavit says: "In the last few months he has treated me in a cruel and inhuman way; more recently he has abandoned me and refused to provide for me. She also alleges he formed the Charles M. Siegel Company to put his resources beyond the reach of Mrs. Siegel, and also that he had transferred real estate so as to cut off her dower right.

Mrs. Lena Sperling, Mrs. Siegel's mother, in an affidavit, says: "I often in the last three months visited my daughter, and I noticed her husband engaged with her in violent quarrels. In the latter part of March, 1909, he came in, called her names, and threatened to kill her. He ran upstairs, and immediately rushing down again flashed a revolver, and was only with difficulty subdued. My son, Henry, got the revolver later and found it was loaded."

According to his lawyers, Mr. Siegel's explanation of the trouble was too much interference from his wife's family. He says he has provided for her steadily, as well as he could, and is willing to support and live with her if they live alone, but that he is not ready to live with her family. He denies the charges involving other women.

Metropolitan Life Benefits Increased.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has announced that in consequence of a reduction of the ratio of expense to the premiums receivd of 8 per cent. it is able to increase the benefits on all industrial policies issued since Jan. 1, 1907, by about 10 per cent. On the old industrial policies the company is paying out $2,500,000 in bonuses this year over and above all obligations implied in the policies.

BACK TAX SALE BARGAINS.

The Largest Item a Claim of $8,494—Owners of Some Parcels Unknown.

At the continuance yesterday of the arrearage tax sales being held held by the Department of Finance 104 liens on parcels of property on which the city's claims aggregate $81,000 were disposed of at bargain prices.

The average of the purchase price of the liens was only a little above 6 per cent., and only one claim was sold at the limit set by law, 12 per cent. The bidding was lively, however, and the sale was carried through with a rush. There were no bidders on two or three items, which were not bought in by the city, as permitted by the law, but will be included in the next sale.

The advertisement, in which there are over 3,000 items, was cleaned up so far as No. 636. The last item sold was the most interesting. It was on a parcel in East Third Street, between the Bowery and Second Avenue, and went to the Mannados Realty Company at 1-920th of 1 per cent. It was based on a claim of $245.

The owner is unknown, the parcel having been buried in the taxbooks for many years. The low price was explained by the fact that the parcel is a small strip of land now used as an alleyway which adjacent property owners are anxious to acquire.

A lien on a parcel in Elizabeth Street, between Canal and Bayard, based on a claim of $48.12, being an unpaid assessment for the Elm Street widening, was sold for 7 per cent.

The single 12 per cent. sale was on a parcel at the foot of East Fourth Street assessed to Edward Brennan, on which the unpaid taxes since 1897 aggregate, with interest, $7,018. A lien on a small strip of land in Stanton Street, between the Bowery and Chrystie Street, was sold at one-eighth of 1 per cent. The owner of this parcel is also unknown. The arrearage was only $24.

A claim of $1,182.46 on a parcel in South Street, between Jefferson and Clinton, assessed to Mary de Peyster, was sold at 5 per cent. The first arrearage was in 1881. The amount at that time was only $20, but has increased with the valuation to $87.

The largest single sale was on a claim of $8,494 on a parcel in Hester Street, between Ludlow and Essex, assessed to John Townsend. It went at 4 per cent. The taxes have not been paid since 1859, when the amount was only 53.76.

The sales will be continued two or three times a week until the advertisement is cleaned up.

100,000 CHILDREN MARCH IN BROOKLYN

RECEPTION FOR HUGHES

He and Mr. Sherman Are Entertained at a University Club Luncheon.

Under lowering skies, with now and then a sprinkle of rain, more than 100,000 Sunday school children of Brooklyn marched in the Anniversary Day parade of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union yesterday afternoon. The children paraded proudly before the Governor of the State and the Vice President of the United States.

It was Vice President Sherman's first experience as a reviewer of Brooklyn's Sunday school army of peace, and so impressed and pleased was he with this exclusively Brooklyn idea that he gave it as his opinion that other communities in the land might well copy it. Other men of prominence who reviewed the parade included Commandant Murdock of the Navy Yard, Gen. O. O. Howard, Congressmen Law, Calder, Foelker, and Young, and Borough Presidents Coler and Cromwell.

Before the parade Gov. Hughes, Vice President Sherman, and others were the guests of William Berri at a luncheon at the University Club. The Governor, in a brief speech, spoke of the distinctive place Anniversary Day held in the civic affairs of the borough.

From the University Club Gov. Hughes went to Greenpoint to a reception by the Young Men's Christian Association. He then reviewed the paraders in Greenpoint.

The children marched in divisions, a division to a district. The largest of these were the Prospect Park and Bushwick divisions.

MEN TEACHERS REPLY.

Say Women Teachers Erred in Their Resolution on the Salary Dispute.

Miss Grace C. Strachan's Women Teachers' Association entirely mistook the motive behind the men teachers' request for more pay for the women in the beginning, according to a statement made yesterday by President Edward S. Shumway of the Association of Men Teachers and Principals, which was attacked by the Women Teachers' Association in a resolution sent to the Board of Education on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Shumway says the Men Teachers' Association never dreamed of asking an increase in the initial pay of the women teachers for the sake of the teachers, as Miss Strachan and her associates seem to think, but in the sole interest of the children and the public schools as a whole. The men teachers were entirely satisfied to let the women fight out the salary question themselves, and they would not have the women think their action was meant as an offer of assistance.

ESCAPED CONVICT CAUGHT.

Cincotta Hid Himself in a Tree Stump for Three Nights.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y., June 10.—John Cincotta, convicted of manslaughter, and who was serving a long sentence at Dannemora prison, was captured in this city Wednesday night after having escaped from Fonda Jail two weeks ago. Cincotta was transferred to the jail from prison as a witness in the murder trial of Frank Denatto now in progress at Fonda. Cincotta had been hiding in the woods about Amsterdam, and at 11 o'clock last night he passed through the city in an automobile intending to get to Canastota.

Cincotta had been without food for three days at a time, and he secreted himself in an old stump for three nights. He lost 40 pounds and is in a weakened condition.

CLOSING UP PEABODY FUND.

The Trustees of the Peabody Educational Fund met yesterday at the Waldorf-Astoria and distributed $1,000,000 among the educational institutions of the South. The proceedings were private, and it was stated that no announcement will be made of the beneficiaries nominated yesterday. It was also announced that another meeting will be held in October, when the balance of the fund, amounting to about $1,250,000, will be apportioned.

This will close up the fund which was instituted by George Peabody at the close of the civil war to assist in the introduction of the common school system of the North in the Southern States. Up to now only the interest on the fund has been distributed, most of it going to teachers' institutes and Normal schools.

Visiting Fire Chiefs

—You cannot afford to overlook these Fire Hose Facts

Eureka Fire Hose, bought fourteen years ago by the City of New York, can be seen today in regular use by some of the hardest worked engine companies in the city—in the inflammable paint and dry goods districts.

Eureka Hose has been successfully used for many years in the cold Northwestern cities and towns of the United States and Canada, and even in Alaska, without complaint of freezing or undue water absorption.

This proves its adaptability for cold, as well as warm climates.

Eureka Four-Ply High-Pressure Fire Hose

Made of four plies, all woven simultaneously and bound together in a solid homogeneous fabric, Eureka Hose plies are yet so distinct that one or two of them can be entirely worn away or removed without injury to those remaining—leaving an absolutely complete and serviceable two-ply, rubber lined hose.

No hose whose chief recommendation is low price can meet this test. Do you know of any other hose that has such qualities?

We will make this conclusive test for you any day, at our factory in Jersey City, under the supervision of any expert, whether he be Fire Chief or hose manufacturer.

Couple one section of Eureka Hose with sections of every other kind in use. Then administer water pressure until the bursting point is reached. Eureka Hose will survive them all and be safely be put back into service after the contest.

Eureka Fire Hose

Eureka Hose is effectively safeguarded against rot or mildew. The antiseptic process it undergoes is the result of 30 years of study and experiment, and with ordinary Fire Department care, this process insures constant pliability—whether the hose is wet or dry.

Any official specification that does not require a four-ply, circular and solidly woven fabric, with a modern-idea rubber lining, will not secure for you the best hose.

It is false economy to look for quantity rather than quality—and dangerous, also, where fire hose is concerned.

Almost every severe conflagration brings forth new Eureka Hose testimonials in the shape of emergency orders. No greater tribute can be paid to any sort of fire equipment.

On April 13th, an order for 5,000 feet of Eureka Hose was telephoned for from Rochester—when part of that city was ablaze. Within twelve hours this hose was delivered and in service.

A week earlier, under like conditions, a similar order came from Fort Worth, Texas, and was filled with equal promptitude and to the great satisfaction of the citizens and authorities of that community.

There are various reasons why Eureka Hose is not universally used. The only sane one is unfamiliarity with its virtues.

That is why we want you to call at our office. We want to show you why "Eureka" is the best hose made.

Don't wait until you are in the market for hose. Come in at any time—you will be cordially welcomed.

RUNAWAY HORSES TIE UP FIFTH AV.

DRIVER DRAGGED AND HURT

Mounted Policemen Finally Overhaul Them, but One Smashes Into a Truck, Breaking Its Back.

A runaway, which began with a smashed wagon in Madison Avenue and a pistol shot and the scream of a dying horse at Sixth Avenue, threw the intervening quiet blocks in Forty-eighth Street into an uproar yesterday at noon. Fifth Avenue traffic was stopped and every one ran out of their houses at the clattering of the hoofs and the shouts of the pursuing mounted policemen.

When everything was all over Chester W. Chapin of 331 West End Avenue had lost a $1,100 sorrel horse he bought less than a week ago to complete a team of roadsters, and his plucky groom, Walter Lee, after being dragged at the horses' heels for almost a block was badly hurt.

In the single seat of Mr. Chapin's phaeton Lee had just taken his employer to the latter's office at 25 Broad Street, and was driving up Madison Avenue toward his Fifty-fourth Street stables. At Forty-eighth Street he turned out on the car tracks to avoid an ice wagon. The slim, iron-tired wheel of the phaeton slipped down into the trolley slot and stuck there. While the horses tugged and sprang vainly forward the vehicle behind them refused to budge.

At the same time a shower of sparks and a series of explosions, caused by the short circuiting of the feed wire in the slot, were going off like a pack of firecrackers right under the horses' heels. The off horse was older and more docile. But the new sorrel was spirited and not used to city streets. He plunged forward with all his might, and in an instant his mate caught his panic and bolted also.

The pole of the lightly constructed trap was torn from its fastenings. Lee, the reins wrapped around his hands, was dragged over the dashboard, and in a moment the swerving animals, with the pole and the driver's body bounding about their heels, were dashing through Forty-eighth Street toward Fifth Avenue's file of autos and carriages. Knowing that he would probably be brained against one of the latter, Lee let go before reaching the corner. He had a bruise on almost every part of his body from being dragged along the asphalt, and the blood from a cut on his forehead made it impossible for him to see.

When the runaways sped across Fifth Avenue there was nothing behind them but a few splinters of wood and shreds of leather. A pedestrian seeing them coming ran out into the street and waved back an approaching Fifth Avenue 'bus. Half a block above, looking down the avenue, Mounted Policemen McGlynn and Plagge of Traffic Squad C saw the tearing animals flash across the line of vehicles and disappear toward Sixth Avenue. They gave spur to their mounts and galloped into West Forty-eighth Street in pursuit. In spite of the runaways' half block start the policemen caught up with them before they reached Sixth Avenue.

Plagge was mounted on Envoy, a trained police horse, which has been in the department's service for many years and has assisted in the catching of many runaways. As the four racing horses got near Sixth Avenue Envoy, of his own accord, swung imperceptibly in alongside of the black off horse, and Plagge reached out his hand to catch his bridle.

Quiet as his motion was, it threw both the runaways into a greater panic. They swerved in toward the north curb, forcing McGlynn's horse, which had been pounding along on the other side of them, to take to the sidewalk. There is a little yellow paint store on the north side of Forty-eighth Street, at Sixth Avenue. In front of it a solid truck, laden with oils and pigments, was standing. In swerving the sorrel runaway smashed into it. He struck the truck with his shoulder. The force of the blow was so great as to double him up and throw him on his haunches. He gave a single scream and fell over. All four horses were so mixed up around the truck by this time that none of the pursuers could see which was injured until the sorrel sank down in the gutter. The police and crowd tried to coax him to rise, but he could not.

Several of the doctors whose offices line the street ran out and pushed through the crowd. They ran their hands up and down the sorrel's broken back and said that the animal should be shot and put out of its pain. Reluctantly, Policeman Plagge took out his revolver, placed its muzzle behind the sorrel's ear, and put a bullet into its brain.

Just as the shot rang out, Driver Lee, who had been picked up dazed and bleeding by spectators, came limping up. He became hysterical on seeing what had been done. The uninjured horse and the wagon were taken back to the Fifty-fourth Street stables.

Aetna Insurance Co. Wins Suit.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals to-day affirmed the decision of Judge Holt in favor of the Aetna Insurance Company and the Albany & Susquehanna Railroad against the Delaware & Hudson Company for collection of unpaid rentals arising from saving of interest made by refunding of bonds. This decision confirms a judgment of $1,107,923 obtained by the stockholders on behalf of the Albany & Susquehanna Company and operates to require the additional payment of about $120,000 a year to the Albany & Susquehanna Company, more than 3 per cent. on its outstanding capital stock.

Barry Must Go to Prison Now.

Supreme Court Justice Gildersleeve dismissed yesterday the writ of habeas corpus sworn out by Charles Barry, who was convicted in General Sessions of being implicated in note frauds which were discovered by District Attorney Jerome last Winter, and sentenced for one to five years in Sing Sing. Barry will now have to begin his sentence pending the decision of the Court of Appeals on his appeal of the case.

SMUGGLED FINERY SALE.

Little Rivalry for Goods, Most of Which Went to Dealers.

There was another sale of smuggled finery at the Custom House yesterday, when the contents of another of the five trunks seized recently was disposed of. Little rivalry developed in the bidding, and most of the articles were bought in by dealers at prices that averaged about half of the appraised value.

A white lace robe, appraised at $1,300, was bought by an out-of-town dealer for $280, and a dress of Brussels lace, valued at $500, was sold for $350, the highest price of the four days' sale. Like the prices the attendance has fallen off. There was no crowding yesterday, and the dealers, having appraised each article offered, were critical in making their selections. One representative of a big Brooklyn firm departed without making a bid. He said the season was practically over and there was no advantage in obtaining the models offered for sale.

Some of the articles and the prices realized were: A princess gown, embroidered batiste, lace trimming, $90; one of embroidered organdie, blue and white, $70; a similar gown of coral and white, $92, and a Brussels net robe, $177.50; chiffon broadcloth suit, black, $70; white embroidered chiffon, pink satin lined, $150, and an Empire, navy blue marquisette, said to be worth $300, brought only $100.

The receipts of the sale were $7,864, and the goods sold were appraised at between $13,000 and $15,000.

PARK CONCERTS OPEN SUNDAY

Nahan Franko's Orchestra of Fifty-five Musicians to Play.

Nahan Franko will open his fourth season of Summer concerts at Central Park next Sunday. They will be given each Saturday and Sunday afternoon during the season in the pavilion in the Mall, near Seventy-second Street.

Fifty-five musicians, chosen from such bodies as the Philharmonic and New York Symphony Societies, will comprise his orchestra. Mr. Franko says he believes better results can be obtained from orchestral work than from bands in outdoor concerts. In all other places where the city provides music during the Summer bands will prevail.

It is Mr. Franko's idea to give music which he considers elevating to the public taste. He frowns upon "popular" music, preferring to give, so far as possible, only operatic and symphonic selections.

"I propose to give excerpts this Summer from all the operatic novelties of the preceding season," said Mr. Franko yesterday. "My Saturday programmes will be somewhat lighter than those of Sunday, which will be distinctly classical."

MISS MORGAN GOES ABROAD.

She Will Tour the Continent by Auto —Declines to Talk of Suffrage.

Miss Anne Morgan, daughter of J. P. Morgan, sailed for Havre yesterday on the French line steamship Provence. J. P. Morgan, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Satterlee were at the pier to see her depart.

Miss Morgan said she was going abroad for a rest. Much of her time will be spent in automobiling on the Continent. She declined to discuss the suffrage movement or any of the undertakings in which she is engaged.

JOY RIDER CONVICTED.

Philadelphia Chauffeur Found Guilty of Manslaughter.

NORRISTOWN, Penn., June 10.—Charles Scheers, a chauffeur of Philadelphia, was convicted in Criminal Court to-night of involuntary manslaughter. Sentence will be pronounced on Saturday. It was alleged that Scheers took his employer's automobile without permission and with several friends went on a "joy ride." Running at a terrific rate of speed and on the wrong side of the road, he struck two men, killing one of them.

After the accident Scheers disappeared and was arrested at Cleveland, Ohio.

GAYNOR'S CHARGES ABSURD, SAYS METZ

DOESN'T WANT TO BE MAYOR

Agrees with the Justice That the City Needs More Subways, but Its Credit Must Be Guarded.

Controller Metz refused to enter into personalities yesterday in discussing the attack made on him by Justice Gaynor at a meeting in Brooklyn on Wednesday night. He did not seem to take the criticisms directed at him seriously.

"Justice Gaynor made a good stump speech," he said, "but what he said, really, was all claptrap. As for his opinion of me, I have nothing to say. The Court of Appeals may reverse him, but I may not.

"I understood that this meeting which he addressed was called to discuss subway matters, but it seems that its sole object was to attack Controller Metz. He says that Belmont is my boss. I am glad to know that, for I never knew before that I had a boss. Don't you think it is rather strange that Belmont don't fire me if this is the case, in view of the manner in which I have been keeping after the company that he represents to get it to live up to its obligations to the city?

"But, seriously, every one knows that this Fourth Avenue subway matter is in the courts. When the question of the debt limit is decided by the Court of Appeals you can depend upon it I will act according to the law and the best interests of the people of the city. Just now I am too busy upholding the city's credit to think of anything else or even be a candidate for Mayor.

"The learned Justice says that I am a candidate, I know, but he is wrong. I have repeatedly declared that I don't want any more of public office. Do I believe that Justice Gaynor is looking for the nomination? Far be it from me to impugn the motives of a Justice of the Supreme Court, Appellate Division.

"Now, as for the present Subway, I would like to explain that so every one will understand it, for some people may have been impressed with what Justice Gaynor had to say. As a matter of fact the Subway has not cost the city a single cent to date. For years the old Rapid Transit Commission tried in vain to get capitalists to say they would undertake its operation. Whitney and Ryan would have none of it, and at that time it was thought that it would only cost about $35,000,000 instead of more than $50,000,000.

"This talk about the city making a present of the Subway to any one is rot. The city has done nothing but extend its credit for the Subway. The money for the Subway was raised by the city by issuing interest-bearing bonds, the principal of which is payable in fifty years. The contract between the operating company and the city provides that the interest on all securities shall be paid by the company in quarterly installments. We send the company a bill every quarter and get a check in return.

"Annually the company pays 1 per cent. toward the amortization of the bonds. These 1 per cent. payments, with accrued compound interest, will a little more than amortize these securities at the end of the fifty years, so that by that time the company will have paid off all the bonds, principal and interest. The city borrowed the money and the company is repaying the loan with interest. How can the city lose anything on the investment?

"Furthermore, the lease of the Subway by the city terminates at the end of fifty years, with an optional twenty-five year extension. The city really owns the Subway and will take it over after the company has paid for it."

The Controller said that since he has been in office the Subway payments have been made regularly. He explained that if they ceased the lease would terminate.

"I nver said," he continued, "that Mr. Belmont built the Subway. I said that he took a chance on its operation, with all the obligations that went with the lease, when no one else would. Furthermore, he built the power houses and put millions of dollars into equipment. The city extended its credit for the Brooklyn addition only about $2,000,000, while Mr. Belmont furnished from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000.

"Justice Gaynor cries, 'We want more subways!' To that I say, 'Amen!' But he doesn't tell us how to get them."

TALK OVER SUBWAY PLANS.

W. J. Wilgus Sees Chairman Willcox About Proposed Water Front Route.

President William J. Wilgus of the New Amsterdam Corporation, which is a bidder on the construction of a water-front line of elevated and subway, called with Edward M. Shepard, his counsel, on Chairman William R. Willcox of the Public Service Commission yesterday to talk over various details of the proposal which the company will have to make to the commission in the near future.

It was said after the interview that the discussion did not run to matters that were not already made public in the letter to the commission which the New Amsterdam Corporation sent last Winter.

BURGLARS LOOT A STORE.

Two burglars, who have been traveling around Westchester County in a green-covered wagon drawn by a team of bay horses, broke into the store of Walker B. Adams at Bedford Station early yesterday and stole $1,500 worth of goods.

They forced open a window after cutting the burglar alarm wire and then carted away in their wagon 100 suits of clothing, a lot of hardware, farming implements, and other goods. A few years ago burglars, while attempting to rob this same store, were surprised by Walker B. Adams, Sr., and his son, and in a running fight the father was killed, while the son killed two of the thieves.

MOTHER KILLS BOY OF 7.

Then Slashes Herself with a Carving Knife—Dying in a Hospital.

Mrs. Georgianna Day, a widow, 43 years old, who lived in destitute circumstances with her only child, Harry, 7 years old, in two small rooms at 77 Ralph Street, Williamsburg, killed her son by nearly decapitating him with a carving knife yesterday and then slashed herself. She was removed in a dying condition to the German Hospital. The police say she was undoubtedly insane. From neighbors they learned that she had been acting strangely of late and was also a victim of the drug habit.

REBUKES JURY FOR VERDICT.

Judge Mulqueen Lectures Men Who Acquitted Wrinn of Burglary.

The jury that acquitted George Wrinn of 597 Ninth Avenue, who was on trial for burglary on Wednesday, was summoned yesterday before Judge Mulqueen of General Sessions to hear a lecture on the verdict rendered.

Mrs. Mary Lazibat of 410 West Forty-second Street found two men in her apartment on the evening of April 27. She later recognized Wrinn and pointed him out to the detective.

Wrinn was the only witness in his own behalf, and the jury apparently believed his story until they were summoned before Judge Mulqueen this morning and rebuked for their verdict.

Three-quarters of the population are affected and ninety deaths are reported.

TROOPS ENCAMPED FOR BIG-GUN DRILLS

THIS CITY TO BE ATTACKED

Militia Regiments Sent for Instruction to Forts Wadsworth, Totten, Schuyler, and Hamilton.

The joint manoeuvres of the Coast Artillery companies of the United States Army stationed near this city and the 3,000 National Guardsman, included in the three regiments of the Coast Artillery Corps, N. G. N. Y., began yesterday. Early in the morning the New York troops assembled at their armories, and by 8 o'clock the organizations were on their way to the seaside fortifications to which they had been assigned.

The Ninth Regiment went to Fort Wadsworth, the Eighth to Forts Totten and Schuyler, and the Thirteenth of Brooklyn to Fort Hamilton.

By noon the Guardsmen had reached their respective destinations and pitched camp alongside the regulars. The manoeuvres will last nine days. For a week the regulars had been preparing for the reception of the Guardsmen, and everything was ready at the forts when they got there. Very little work was done yesterday, as the troops of the services were given a chance to become acquainted.

The largest of the four encampments are those at Forts Wadsworth and Hamilton. There is a full regiment of the National Guard at each of these posts. Col. Morris was in command at Fort Wadsworth and Col. Davis at Fort Hamilton. Col. Austen was in charge at Forts Totten and Schuyler. The regular commanders of the posts exercise general supervision over the joint forces.

There will be very little excitement attending the exercises this week. For the first few days the officers and men will attende lectures by the regular officers and will be instructed in coast artillery drills, the working of the great guns, the searchlight, range finding, fire control, and other things necessary to know in coast artillery warfare.

Next week the battles, in which New York will be attacked, or the supposed enemy's ships destroyed, will be fought. There will be little chance to sleep around the fortifications when the battles are in progress, as all the big guns will be used in these imaginary struggles for the possession of the city. The torpedo planters, that are to represent the hostile navy in these battles, are expected to arrive in New York this morning.

The exact time of the attack on New York is being kept a secret, and the first information that the Guardsmen will receive that the city is in danger will be when the call to arms is sounded at the forts. This call may come in the daytime, or it may come late in the night.

There was to have been instruction in the operation of searchlights last night, but owing to the fog that blanketed the bay the exercises were postponed until to-night. Sunday there will be a joint dress parade and on Monday sub-calibre practice at the big guns will begin. There will be a battery drill to-day and another to-morrow.

The regulars were loud in their praise of the guardsmen yesterday, complimenting them on their quick work in pitching camp, and their all-around soldierly appearance. Each of the camps is being looked after by a regular army sanitarian, the sanitary officer at Wadsworth being Major Charles E. Woodruff, who was in charge of sanitation at the joint manoeuvres at Pine Plains last Summer.

Renwick, as architect for the Grace Church Corporation, has filed with Building Superintendent Murphy plans for remodeling the chantry and honor rooms on the south side of Grace Church to conform to the design of a garden plot to be erected at Broadway and Tenth Street, previously occupied by the old Vienna Bakery. The improvements will cost $30,000.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
JOHN R. HEGEMAN, PRESIDENT

INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT

In January, 1907, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company largely increased the benefits in its Industrial policies by reason of a heavy reduction in expenses and improvement in mortality experience.

During the past three years the Company has steadily reduced its expenses, so that it is enabled to make a further increase in benefits. Industrial insurance policies have a unit of weekly premium—three cents, five cents and multiples thereof—and the amount of insurance varies with the age.

All Industrial Life policies (premiums cease after age 74), Endowment policies at age 80 and Adult Twenty-year Endowment according to a new table of benefits adopted for policies issued after July 1, 1909. In other words, not only does the Company issue a new table for policies hereafter issued, but it makes the increase retroactive since the present form of Limited Payment and Endowment at age 80 policies were adopted.

Upon the OLD INDUSTRIAL POLICIES the Company is paying out TWO AND A HALF MILLIONS OF DOLLARS IN BONUSES THIS YEAR, bringing up the total Bonuses and Concessions upon Industrial policies to EIGHTEEN MILLIONS OF DOLLARS IN SIXTEEN YEARS. This is OVER AND ABOVE ANY AND ALL OBLIGATIONS expressed or implied in the policies.

The Metropolitan in its Industrial Department has the lowest Ratio of Expense of all the industrial Insurance Companies in the world which pay immediate benefits. In FIVE YEARS its

Ratio of Expense to Premium Income has been Reduced
8 per cent., representing an Annual Saving of Three and a Half Millions of Dollars

The new Convertible policy issued by the Company is a novel form of insurance which becomes fully paid-up life insurance in a few years and is then automatically converted into endowment insurance, the maturity of which is periodically shortened as payment of premiums continues.

The Company is abreast of the public demand for combination of term insurance and annuities, and serves the public better than any other agency.

INDUSTRIAL POLICIES IN FORCE: NEARLY 9,500,000, INSURING NEARLY $1,500,000,000.

ORDINARY DEPARTMENT

The Company has reduced expenses six per cent. in this Department in the last FIVE years—representing an ANNUAL SAVING OF OVER A MILLION AND A QUARTER OF DOLLARS IN THE ORDINARY DEPARTMENT.

The Company issues policies in the Ordinary Department in amounts from $500 to $1,000,000 upon all approved plans at the lowest rates. IN 1908 IT WROTE MORE PAID-FOR BUSINESS IN ITS ORDINARY OLD LINE INSURANCE (exclusive of industrial), in the United States and Canada, THAN ANY OTHER COMPANY.

All of its policies in the Ordinary as well as the Industrial Department are written on the non-participating plan. The Metropolitan pays its dividends at the start—that is to say, it cuts down the premiums. It believes the plain common-sense men who make up the bulk of policy-holders look for a plain business contract. By plain business contracts we mean those which tell their own story upon their face; which leave nothing to the imagination, borrow nothing from hope, require definite conditions and make definite promises in dollars and cents.

In both Departments combined the Company has, in each of the past fifteen years, written more paid-for insurance than any other company in the world

The Company upon Its Total Business Has in the Last Ten Years Reduced Its Ratio of Expenses to Premium Income Fifteen Per Cent.

Use cold cream if you want to. It has its value.

But to clean the skin, you must use soap: pure soap: Ivory Soap.

Never mind if it does cost only a few cents a cake. It is infinitely purer than most soaps that sell for five times its price.

Use a soft cloth and hot water—to open the pores, allowing dust and dirt to make their way out. Dip the cloth into the water and rub on it some Ivory Soap. Souse the skin well for almost or quite five minutes. Rinse with cold water; cold water closes the pores and makes the skin firm.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

TIGERS BEAT YANKS IN ERRORLESS GAME

BATS IN THE WINNING RUN

3,000 Fans See Hilltoppers Nosed Out in Contest Played in Light Rain and on a Soggy Field.

Scotch mist dimmed the eyes of the Yankees in American League Park yesterday, for they couldn't see George Mullin's twisters oftener than once in any inning, and Detroit captured the last game of the series by a score of 2 to 1. It was an errorless battle. All the run-getting was done in the first two rounds. Hughey Jennings's Royal Bengals got McConnell's Angora for two hits, a brace of saunters, and a wild pitch right off the reel, one run resulting. A stroll, a sacrifice, a single, and a force hit enabled the Hilltoppers to tie in the same chapter, but in the next round, though Manager Stallings substituted Manning for McConnell, a couple of doubles, with a toddle sandwiched, gained the conclusive count for the visitors. After that, the struggle settled into a pitchers' duel so keen that neither side could bunch hits.

Several men made the midway, but Chase was the only pathfinder to reach third after the second inning. Consequently, it was with a general we-have-eaten-the-canary expression that the Tigers prowled Washingtonward, with two of the three games weather permitted in the series tucked under their stripes, while Stallings's stars gathered outside the clubhouse with a purposeful air and grimly sandpapered their bats, in preparation for the first game of the Chicago series to-day.

Fans having small or large chunks of reproach to hurl at the Yankees for yesterday's defeat would do well to vent their petulance over on the Jersey side. No apology is due from the local players. They worked hard and well for victory, and several times only glittering play on the part of the champs snatched it from their grasp. Moreover, they encountered Mullin at the top of his form. Jennings's twirler is going some and then some more these days. Yesterday's was his eleventh victory of the season, with not a defeat to break the string. In addition, he is the best batsman among boxmen anywhere in the world, and it was with his own good two-bagger that he sent Schaefer loping over the line with the winning run. When a pitcher can hold a hard-hitting team down to seven scattered safeties and then pare off a two-timer when most needed, they do say it's no discredit to be beaten by him.

Another thing that helped whip the Yankees was the demon play of little Bush, the Detroit short stop. He was an infield and an outfield in himself. When it came to ranging the field, Jove's war horse would have looked like an equestrian statue by comparison. He was here, there, everywhere, most of the time where they were, hardly ever where they weren't. The sound ball doctrine, "Hit 'em where they ain't," was foolish talk with Bush pawing up diamond mud. Twice in swift succession in the seventh, with a man sacrificed to second, the Western midfielder turned seemingly sure hits into outs at first by scoops and flips that dragged hoarse cries of approval even from disappointed rooters. But Bush had to be good to play opposite Austin. Stallings's short stop was all steel and rubber, too. His running catch of McIntyre's foul fly far back of third base in the seventh round was a hurricane play that brought the 3,000 fans up standing. So was his pick-up of O'Leary's soil-scorcher in the second.

As through a glass darkly, the fans who defied the drizzle saw McIntyre go to bat in the breakaway. Matty had put on a new suit of swatting togs for the occasion, as his slam to left centre showed before McConnell had time to get fairly wound up. The smart rap astonished Mac so much that, though he fanned Bush, he let McIntyre reach second on a wild pitch, and gave Crawford such an easy one that Sam sliced off a screaming single, on which Matty traveled home. A snappy throw by Kleinow to Austin nailed the big fellow at the far station. Cobb, however, strolled and stole, achieving a second steal on the ball that franked Moriarty. By that time the teaminess of the Yankees had vanished, for awhile, and Moriarty purloined a perch with his usual airy grace. But Cobb made an ill-judged attempt at home and was smothered at the plate on McConnell's whip to Kleinow.

Demmitt, first of the Hilltoppers to lift the locust, took the easiest way. Keeler had felt on his bat and he babied the ball a few feet from the plate in a nifty sacrifice. Elberfeld found a hole in the air Cobb had neglected to plug. It looked good for a score, but Duke Farrell, coaching, checked Demmitt at third, owing to the heavy going. Anyway, Dem breasted the tape on Engle's force of Elberfeld at second. Then, with the tallies tied, Claudius took forty winks off first—just thirty-nine too many, for a lightning fling from Mullin to Moriarty got him.

O'Leary down, Schaefer doubled to left centre in the next round. Stanage, who had supplanted Schmidt, got a ticket o' leave. It was a nervous moment. Mullin faced Manning, who had succeeded McConnell on the slab, with a large showing of confidence, encouraged by much whooping, whistling, grass-pulling, and leg and arm work on the part of Manager Jennings in the coacher's cage. And, ere Manning was well in his stride, Great George hammered the hide for a brace of bags and Schaefer shot over. Apparently, the Detroits were resolved to cinch their victory then and there. With men on third and second and one out, McIntyre sent a long foul to right. Stanage certainly would have counted on a catch, but Little Willie Keeler showed for the thousandth time that he knew a thing or two, for he kept his hands carefully off the ball. Then Matty, in desperation, smashed a line fly to centre, but Demmitt froze to it and made such a beautiful throw to the plate that Stan dared not try a dash. Whereupon Bush popped to Elberfeld.

Laporte, in the same inning, one down, doubled handily, but Buffalo Bush, the demon of the plain, gathered in Austin's liner, and with a snap to Schaefer at second, turned it into a double play. Following which, two strings of beads told the rest of the tale. The score:

BETWEEN THE INNINGS.

Austin bucked up satisfactorily in the last of the string. Made the most of seven opportunities.

Chase keeps up his custom of taking them off the ground and out of the air. He saved two comrades from errors in the closing game.

Girl with green eyes in the grand stand gazed at McConnell all through the first inning. No wonder he was rattled.

Dick Murphy didn't have to worry about keeping intruders out of the press box. The drizzle was his deputy for the day. It almost drove the critics out, too.

Not for nothing are the Tigers called "the class of the league." Their play in this series was not only classy but classical.

The Yankees may warble the Seventh Regiment chorus: "They said 'Them guys, they ain't got no style.' Got style all the while, all the while."

Willie Keeler fully intended to swell his batting average yesterday, but those pesky Brooklyn real estate assessments do keep a fellow figuring, and Subway mass meetings require thought.

McIntyre was unnecessarily diligent in bagging Chase's foul in the second. He could have given it the go-by without being suspected of soldiering.

Cree did his level best to pull off a nooker in Kleinow's place in the lucky, but Demon Bush, the Daylight Detective, was one too many for him and then some.

Many of the fans wholly failed to appreciate Keeler's wisdom in saying "Fare you well" to McIntyre's foul in the second. But Matty, who had baited the hook so slyly, grinned sympathetically.

Umpire Evans is a good judge of delivery, but he really ought to pump a little diapason into his voice. Though they laugh at Silk O'Loughlin, everybody knows just what he says.

Secretary Davis has trained all the employes of the Greater New York Club to handle crowds smoothly. On both the big days of the Detroit series everything went without a hitch.

Only One Schoolboy Game Played.

Three games were scheduled yesterday in the elementary school championship series of Greater New York, but only one was decided, the team of School 10 defeating the nine of No. 144 for the championship of Brooklyn at Prospect Park by a score of 8 to 5. The games postponed were No. 17 of Richmond against No. 58 of Queens at Prospect Park, and No. 169 of Manhattan against No. 68 of the Bronx at Crotona Park.

Restriction for Foreign Race Horses.

LONDON, June 10.—At its July meeting the Jockey Club will discuss a new rule proposed by the Stewards, which is as follows:

"No weight shall be allotted to any horse in a handicap until he has run three times in the United Kingdom."

As the Stewards' proposals seldom are rejected, the probable adoption of this stringent rule has come in for much discussion. It is obviously the outcome of the recent influx of French and American horses, and the Stewards' action is by no means generally approved.

YALE GOLFER TIES FOR GOLD MEDAL

BIG FIELD ON THE LINKS

H. W. Legg of Yale, the golf champion of the State of Minnesota, and H. V. Bermingham, ex-champion of the Wykagyl Country Club, tied for the gold medal honors yesterday in the 36-hole qualifying round, which marked the opening of the three-day tournament of the Wykagyl Country Club of New Rochelle. They finished the double round with scores of 172. Legg, who found the hilly portions of the course somewhat difficult in the morning round, needing 91 strokes, made a big improvement in the afternoon, completing the round in 81, the best 18-hole score of the day. Bermingham played very consistent golf, making his two rounds in 88 and 84, respectively.

While the course was heavy, due to the rain, making the conditions for low scoring unfavorable, there was no lack of interest in the day's sport, eighty-two golfers driving off from the first tee in the morning, and only three withdrawing. Marshall Whitlatch of Dyker Meadow and M. J. Condon, the present Wykagyl champion, got places in the first sixteen. One of the noteworthy plays of the day which aroused interesting comment was T. H. Thomas's 18 strokes for the home hole. Mr. Thomas, who hails from the Hackensack Club, got into all the bunkers and traps in the line of play, and found it exceedingly hard to get out of them. His score is a club record for a difficult performance. There were many ties for the last places in the various sets of sixteen, and these will be played off this morning before the drawings for the match-play rounds are made. Five sets qualified for cups. The scores of the first four divisions:

NEW YORK WOMEN WIN.

Local Golfers Beat Philadelphia in First Match for Griscom Cup.

Thirty of the best women golfers in the New York and Philadelphia clubs competed in the first of the two matches for the Griscom Cup yesterday on the links of the Baltusrol Golf Club, at Short Hills, N. J. Fifteen players were on each team, and after a strenuous contest, in which two matches were prolonged to twenty holes, the local delegation won by a single point, winning eight matches to seven. The New York women will, therefore, play the Boston team, the present holders of the trophy, in the final to-day.

As a special feature there was an approaching and putting competition, which was won by Miss Adams, who won the Eastern women's championship the preceding day, Miss Mix coming second. The teams and scores are:

BOWLING RECORD EQUALED.

The feature of the bowling in the National championships at Madison Square Garden last night was the work of O. E. Eskew of Red Bank, N. J., who equaled the world's record for a series of three games in his match with Albert Bisang of New York. Eskew marked up a total of 699. While this figure equals the individual record made by Edward Thompson in the championships last week, Eskew will not be credited with the figure in the championship event as it was rolled to count in the match game only. From his first game to the final Eskew showed improvement, the first netting 215, the second 219, and the third 265. This latter mark is only three pins behind the highest single game record for the tournament made by Fred Clinch of the Alhambra Club of New York.

A novelty was offered the spectators yesterday in a special match between Harry Meyer of New York and Mrs. Nellie Lester of Brooklyn, as one team, and Lee Graff of Indianapolis and Miss Bertha Wilson of Philadelphia, as the opponent. The former combination won handily in a series of three games, total pins to count, by a score of 1,121 to 1,085. The winners captured only one of the three games, but in the second, which they won, gained such a lead that any advantage of their opponents went for nought.

McGovern Whips Goldman.

Phil McGovern won from Charley Goldman last night in a ten-round fight at the East Avenue Athletic Club, Long Island City. For the greater part of the time McGovern forced the fighting, though Goldman was game and landed some telling body blows. McGovern had Goldman on his knees in the fourth, and in the final round Goldman returned the compliment by sending his opponent to the floor, but McGovern was up almost immediately. All of the rounds but the first were in favor of McGovern, who was coached from the ringside by his brother Terry.

GIANTS HELD IN CHECK.

Cubs Shut Them Out and Make Five Runs for Themselves.

CHICAGO, June 10.—One large, mournful zero represents the total achievement of the Giants in this city this afternoon, whereas the Cubs piled up five runs at the expense of Marquard and Ames. Only one Giant got to third base—Myers, in the seventh—and he overrun the bag with fatal result. The visitors were helpless before the brilliant twirling of Pfeister, and the almost flawless fielding of the entire local team. It was a fast game, and the Westerners gave the Eastern boxmen no time to think things over. They went at them hammer and tongs, and the score of 5 to 0 in Chicago's favor was due chiefly to heavy and timely batting by the home players.

It was in the very first inning that the Cubs got busy. Herzog's single and steal in New York's behalf were thrown away, but when the locals went to bat, Sheckard, with one out, hit to left centre for two bags, and after Hofman flied to Tenney, came in on Steinfeldt's single, Harry taking second on the throw home. A passed ball put Steinfeldt on third, and he tallied when Howard slammed the sphere over second for a nook. O'Hara's catch of Schulte's loft ended the inning.

Hofman needed no assistance from a teammate for his run in the third. His own three-bagger and a wild pitch did it. Nevertheless, Manager McGraw left Marquard in the box until the seventh, when he substituted Ames, who was no more successful in stemming the tide of tallies. For in the first round Leon pitched, Steinfeld, after Hofman lined to Murray, doubled to left and dusted home on Howard's one-bagger to centre. A steal by Howard followed, the next thing of interest being the retirement of Schulte on strikes. Howard hurried home on Zimmerman's central single, and Moran's raise to O'Hara ended the run-getting.

Pfeister tightened up still more for the remainder of the game, fanning two men in the eighth and holding the Giants runless. The score:

YALE CREWS ROW IN RAIN.

Special to The New York Times.

GALE'S FERRY, Conn., June 10.—Coach Kennedy sent the Yale 'Varsity crew over the four-mile course on the Thames tonight and the oarsmen surprised the few persons who witnessed the performance by rowing the racing distance in 20 minutes 45 seconds. The record for the course is 20 minutes 10 seconds. Mr. Kennedy insisted that the time was not remarkable. "The conditions were extremely fast," he said, "the oarsmen rowed with an unusually fast tide and the water was smooth. There was no wind. There was a little poor steering of the shell which cost several seconds. I do not regard the time as anything to brag about."

Mr. Kennedy admitted, however, that it was the fastest four miles the eight has rowed this year. One feature of the spin which caused general rejoicing, however, was that every man in the boat stood the trial well. Not one dropped at the finish and they walked from the launch to their quarters in the boat house as if they had not taken any practice.

The trial was made in a driving rain, but Kennedy regarded the other conditions so tempting that he felt that he must accept them.

The Yale crews will lack their assistant manager this year. Harry Curtiss, son of Julian Curtiss of New York City, has scarlet fever, and did not come here with the oarsmen. No changes were made today in any of the Yale crews.

Horses and Horsemen.

The Brooklyn Jockey Club, through P. J. Dwyer, the President, made announcement yesterday that the first extra day of racing for the Gravesend meeting will be put on next Wednesday, when a programme of purses will be offered.

Jockey McIntyre, who was obtained by J. E. Madden from William Garth for the early part of the Spring, yesterday canceled all his riding engagements for the Brooklyn meeting and went to Canada to join the Garth stable.

The Long Island Railroad has made a change in the time for the race track special to the Gravesend course and for the remainder of the Gravesend meeting the special will leave Long Island City at 1 o'clock instead of 1:30 as formerly.

S. C. Hildreth's horse Restigouche, named to start for the Patchogue Stakes at Gravesend yesterday, was scratched from that race, but was sent out and worked a mile in 1:47 in the mud. Montgomery, in the same stable, the top weight in the mile and a furlong handicap, was drawn from that race and shipped to Canada, where he is engaged in a Montreal stake next Saturday. He is to make a trip similar to that of King James, for the Montreal Cup, and will be sent back to New York next week.

ROYAL ONYX WINS; FRANK GILL DIES

HANDICAP FOR THE SQUIRE

The racing at Gravesend yesterday tried the fortitude of racegoers, but made compensation in the sensational character of the sport that was provided in spite of the dismal weather and deep and muddy track. The contest for the Patchogue Selling Stake, the feature of the programme, yielded its full share of the spectacular and sensational, and brought about a real surprise when Royal Onyx finished as the winner, after a singularly spirited race.

There was an abundance of speed in the race, with the fast horse Chapultepec standing out as the popular choice, with Dreamer, McCarter, Sir John Johnson, and Rosimiro as the next choices, and Royal Onyx had to put in the best performance of his career to get to the winning post first after many shifts in position for the leaders through the five and three-quarter furlongs of the "about" six furlong course.

In the two handicaps on the card, horses owned by "Lucky Jack" McGinnis were starters, and the results left some doubt as to the owner's luck, for while he won a purse with Notasulga, he lost a horse by death, Frank Gill, in the second of the handicaps.

Frank Gill, the top weight in the mile and a furlong, was the public choice, and some of the experts said they could not see how he could lose. The Squire took the track at the lifting of the barrier, and with Frank Gill second made the running from end to end. On the turn into the stretch Frank Gill made a move forward, and for a few strides seemed to be easily overhauling The Squire. He did not falter perceptibly, but weakened in the run down the stretch, and after finishing second, galloped on to the turn into the back stretch, where he dropped dead as he was being pulled up. The track veterinarian who examined him stated that the horse had died of some trouble of the heart.

McGinnis owed much of his fame as "Lucky Jack" to Frank Gill, a horse of English breeding, which he bought at the dispersal sale of the S. S. Brown stable for $5,000. As a three-year-old Frank Gill won about $60,000 in stakes, including the Withers and Coney Island Jockey Club, for McGinnis, who kept the horse heavily insured until the opening of the present year, when he let the insurance lapse, after having declined an offer of $20,000. LONDON, June 10.—The Meadowbrook (Long Island) polo team had a walkaway victory in the first match played to-day for the Ranelagh open cup tournament. They defeated "The Tigers" 14 to 1, but their opponents were a weak lot and counted only one first-class player on the team.

BY 'PHONE FROM BITTER CREEK TO WAMSUTTER, Wyo., June 10.—Yesterday's gale, hail, and rain kept me here till 6:55 this morning. I continued my walk, and this is the first pleasant day I have had since walking into Wyoming, or the first in twenty-seven days.

I was so enthused over this that I arrived at Tipton at 10:10 A. M., a distance of seventeen miles, and Bitter Creek, sixteen miles further, at 2:30 P. M., where I ate dinner and took a nap.

I expect to arrive at Point of Rocks 10:30 P. M. The condition of the railroad is in a very unsettled state owing to the many heavy rains recently causing great destruction to the road bed. The whole working force of the road is employed repairing the damage. Trains are running from 10 to 12 hours late. This keeps my manager from making arrangements for me, as he is still in Wamsutter and I am now dictating my telegram to him.

The Denver Post in yesterday's issue had an account of Sergt. Welsh, who says he is a pedestrian, and how he walked ninety-eight miles last Monday into Denver, saying that he would overtake me in California. The Post states that he was locked up at Fort Logan, and rode into Denver in a street car.

AUTO DECLINE IN FRANCE.

A. E. Schwartz, foreign representative of the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, arrived here yesterday. He says there is a great overproduction of motor cars abroad; that hundreds of cars are in storage, and manufacturers are literally begging dealers to dispose of their stock. American automobiles are rapidly cutting into the foreign market, Mr. Schwartz declares.

"I am agreeably surprised to see the enormous difference between conditions in the automobile trade here and abroad," he said. "Everybody here seems to be as busy and busier than we would dream of on the other side of the ocean. In fact, the conditions here reported briefly to any European manufacturer or dealer would seem incredulous to them. The conditions are the same in the accessory line.

"A few makers of cars abroad endeavor to keep up their reputations and do a little business in some particular type of cars, mostly small cars. But the majority of the manufacturers are simply existing, and where they do each other the most harm is by cutting the price through giving discounts to the private buyer, who, they think, can get along without the dealer. It is, therefore, not astonishing to see big 'To let' signs on some of the stores that were formerly the salesrooms for well-known motor car concerns.

"The reason why this wonderful business has come to almost a standstill in France is partly because of the police, who make arrests as often as they can, many times for the most trifling offenses. Another reason is the high taxation. There is a tax on each horse power and every seat in the car; 5 francs each seat and 5 francs for every horse power. If one buys a 30-horse power automobile with four seats, it means 170 francs' taxation. One hundred and seventy francs to the city and the same amount to the State, total 340 francs.

"A very interesting fact I would like to state is the great number of people that have taken up aerial navigation in general. There is many a man who is and was famously known at the steering wheel of an automobile who has his little idea up his sleeve for a new device for aeroplanes, and I know of one big accessory store that claims to do more business in supplies for aeroplanes than for automobiles."

ACME CAR LEADS IN RACE.

ELLIS, Kan., June 10.—All four cars in the ocean to ocean automobile race passed through Ellis late to-day. The Acme car did not stop, but the two Ford cars were delayed forty-five minutes for repairs. They got away an hour behind the Acme. The Shawmut car was twenty minutes behind the Acme, having left while the Ford cars were repairing.

THE INSURRECTION.

With entire and well-justified confidence the hosts of protection have for a generation relied upon the skill, the valor, and the hardihood of their commanders and their legionaries in the Senate and the House. The opposition of the Democrats to high protective duties has been for the most part faint, feeble, and perfunctory. As a matter of party policy the Democrats had to stand for something not in the Republican creed. Rarely has a voice been lifted in disinterested advocacy of the interests of the consumer.

Now there appear to be several such voices. If DOLLIVER, BEVERIDGE, CUMMINS, BORAH, and the other Republican "insurgents" do not represent the consumer, we fail to see what client or interest they do represent. Certainly they do not speak for the Republican Party or its policy. Senator ALDRICH is the official spokesman and representative of that interest. The insurgents are waging their warfare on the Aldrich schedules not as politicians, not for party, but manifestly because they have heard and felt the demand of the people. The pledges of the Republican Party and of the Republican candidate were accepted in the West as having been given in good faith. The insurgents are simply demanding that those pledges shall be kept. They insist that the widespread popular demand for lower duties shall be heard and heeded. They are a pretty determined band. We do not recall that any former Chairman of the Finance Committee in charge of a tariff bill in the Senate has been talked to as they have talked to Senator ALDRICH. He has been disturbed by their courage and their persistence. The situation within the last few days has become dangerous to Republican unity. Something had to be done.

Accordingly, the ingenious device of the 2 per cent. tax upon the net income of corporations was put forward. That would be embodied in the bill as a compromise. There may be good fiscal reasons for a 2 per cent. tax upon the income of corporations, but there is no reason in economics or in justice why the income of corporations should be taxed that does not apply with equal force to a tax upon the income from a 3,000-acre farm or from a great mercantile establishment. The tax upon corporation income was chosen as the peace offering because during the last seven years the people have been taught to hate corporations. A corporation tax would be popular. Mr. ALDRICH offered to the insurgents a tax on corporation incomes evidently in the hope that upon that vehicle a tariff bill embodying few reductions and many increases of duty might be trundled through the Senate and go on its way to acceptance in the country of the insurgents.

The Rhode Island Senator has underestimated the sincerity and the strong will of his Republican opponents. They reject the corporation tax, they insist upon revision downward in good faith, and they talk ominously and with growing determination of an income tax. That is abhorrent to Eastern protectionists in about the same measure that it is acceptable to the West. Its burdens would fall chiefly upon the East, and the laying of taxes upon incomes would explode a charge of dynamite under the famous citadel of protection; since, if revenue can be obtained in that way, it is obvious that many duties might be lowered or removed.

It is a new situation for Mr. ALDRICH and for the Republican protectionists. They have been accustomed to obedience. Now insurrection confronts them. Weakened in that way, they suffer a further impairment of strength from the gross immorality and bad faith of their proceeding in attempting to maintain or increase the Dingley rates in the face of the solemn pledges of the campaign that those rates should be lowered. Mr. ALDRICH and his band are held together, sustained, and fortified only by the old protectionist principle, which is greed, naked and unashamed. The interests they represent are unwilling to surrender the enormous profits and the great advantage accruing to them from a Government ban upon their foreign competitors. It is a serious situation for them as well as a new one. In view of the often expressed convictions of President TAFT and of his campaign assurances, it is also a serious situation for him.

EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Rev. Dr. EDWARD EVERETT HALE kept himself employed in the very stream of activity until almost his last hour. Dying in his 88th year, he had never permitted himself to enjoy the evening calm of life. He was preacher, lecturer, writer, editor, to the end. But his activities were never violent, he rarely was aggressively contentious, he kept aloof from tumult. His was a gentle life, and he stands in the public mind for gentleness and, on the whole, for "sweet reasonableness." He was one of the last and one of the gentlest of a line of gentle New Englanders, and quite the gentlest of them all, unless we may include THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH in the line. HAWTHORNE, EMERSON, LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, ALCOTT, WHITTIER, specially WHITTIER, were gentle and represented gentleness, but they had their moods of acerbity, of irony, of bitterness. Mr. HOWELLS and Col. HIGGINSON are gentle, but in these later years Socialistic, which is to be provocative of ungentleness in others and to lend countenance to a mob devoid of gentleness.

The least of his line, artistically speaking, Dr. HALE may have been, as his talent and energy were so greatly diffused through so many channels, that he produced little in prose or verse that will outlive him. "The Man Without a Country," however, is literature, and much else that he wrote was strongly influential. The list of his works is very long, and a glance over it recalls many pleasant memories. A strong, sincere, able man, inspired by an unfailing belief in his fellow-men, laboring always for the uplifting of his race, EDWARD EVERETT HALE was an American whose memory will be cherished.

JUDGE GAYNOR'S STIRRING APPEAL TO FREEMEN.

The text of Judge GAYNOR's remarks—more eloquent than convincing—is to be found in the following quotation: "The financing of the present Subway must never be repeated. If it is you are not fit to live as freemen." It would be interesting to know how many besides himself the Judge's burning words brought to that belief. How many of the millions who ride on the Subway think they do not get their 5 cents' worth? Does Tax Commissioner PURDY think the Subway's additions to the tax values—larger than the cost of the Subway—are inadequate? Would the present Mayor hesitate to repeat the Subway operation if he had an opportunity? And are we to understand that if Judge GAYNOR were Mayor he would veto such a proposal? It would be interesting to have answers to such questions, for the approaching campaign perhaps will turn upon them.

The Judge lashes out at the present administration of the city, and invites us all to judge how much more he would do for the people if they gave him the chance. But we suppose he would no more be exempt from the operation of the statutes than any other Mayor. The Judge shares the knowledge which every citizen possesses that the transit situation long ago passed out of the control of the traction magnates into that of those vigilant friends of the people—the lawmakers. The reason the present Subway has not been duplicated is that laws were passed to prevent such an outrage, and they were effective from that time until the recent adjournment of the Legislature, which amended that law. If Judge GAYNOR had been Mayor in Mr. MCCLELLAN's place would he have built subways under the Elsberg law? If he were to be elected Mayor this Fall would he interest capital in traction securities under the statutes limiting fares to 5 cents, compelling every railway to carry passengers to the end of its route within the city limits whatever the length of the route, and compelling it to transfer passengers without limit over any route which passed under the control of the operating company? Is Mr. MCCLELLAN in any different position under those laws than the Judge would be? And ought not the Judge to be reluctant to make such suggestions when he knows that these limiting statutes were passed by the procurement of those who think as he thinks, and that the very first step toward breaking the deadlock in transit construction is the repealing of those laws? Would not intelligent freemen prefer to be led by the nose—as the Judge puts it—by those who have not made such mistakes?

The Judge was careful to dissociate himself from the Fourth Avenue project, although he spoke at a meeting to promote it. That was prudent. If the Judge will not "stand" for it, its prospect must seem to be as dark as it deserves. The Judge preferred to put himself forward as the champion of the broad prosposition of municipal construction and ownership. That possibly might be arguable in principle, but practically is settled conclusively in the negative. The city cannot afford to repeat in the subways its experience in the bridges. The city has one empty subway now, just as it has about a dozen untenanted tracks over bridges completed and approaching completion. The city could not afford to accept as a gift subways costing as much as the bridges, if they were to be operated on the same principle as the bridges, only one of which supports itself, and none of which pays for itself, or ever will along present lines.

The Judge's stirring words are enticing and misleading. He promises what he cannot perform by the token that others have promised before him and failed to perform. Gov. HUGHES himself, who sent a sympathetic letter to the meeting, made his first campaign upon like promises, but the situation remains as it was at that time, or perhaps it is a little worse through the enactment of well-meant statutes which have proved obstructive. At the present moment, for example, the Governor is being petitioned to light a fire under his Public Service Commission, which is obstructing the concession of the South Shore franchise over the Queensboro Bridge, although it has the approval of the city authorities. The Judge seems to us to be intoxicated by the exuberance of his vocabulary. He would be just the man to build subways if they could be built by words, resolutions, or good intentions.

HOW THE SCHOOL ROBS THE HOME.

Mr. JOSEPH LEE of Boston is a man of sense and discretion. Speaking yesterday before the National Conference of Charities and Correction at Buffalo, Mr. LEE had this to say about the plan urged by some philanthropists to feed school children at public expense:

> The community's present determination to do everything possible for the child has resulted in cutting down the functions of the home. The school, for instance, has taken over the provision of the play and manual training; has introduced medical inspection, the school nurses, and in some instances school visitors. Now come such questions as school feeding, and behind that, perhaps, the question of furnishing lodging also. Are all these activities accomplishing the same thing, or do we somewhere cross a line beyond which they are doing a different thing, or even undoing the thing which we started out to do? I think that school feeding represents the crossing of such a line.

Anything that enables the family provider to shift his burdens upon the State tends directly to State Socialism. Socialism and the integrity of the family are essentially opposed. While the Socialists talk about "trial marriages" and view with delight the record of increased divorce in this country, amounting in the ratio of one decree to ten or twelve marriages, clergymen like Dr. SAMUEL DIKE point to one chief occasion for this increase. It lies in the gradual "disuse of the family" by the transfer of its "legitimate functions to the Church, school, and other substitutes for the home." The home has been regarded as the cradle of religion, intelligence, industry, and patriotism. Can the State, which sprung from the family, supersede it, or even exist without it?

FRESH AIR FOR CHILDREN.

The Children's Aid Society, the first to plan on a large scale Summer vacations for the children of the poor, counted last year 18,000 beneficiaries of its enterprise. Boys were sent to the society's farm at Valhalla, Westchester County. Another party of boys was sent to the camp on the Sound near Stamford; five hundred or more slept in tents, fished, bathed, and played games. The girls went in divisions to the Summer Home at Bath Beach, where nature has endowed the place with all the requirements necessary for the uses to which the Children's Aid Society has set it apart.

At Coney Island, near Sea Gate, the society maintains the Health Home for women with sick babies, founded by the late D. WILLIS JAMES; 3,519 women and children were received there last Summer, of whom 3,000 remained from one to four weeks. This quiet and healthful retreat is instrumental in saving a great number of infants' lives that could not have survived the foul atmosphere of the tenements. In addition to this work the Children's Aid Society, through its nurses, visitors, and physicians of the Sick Children's Mission, treated more than 2,000 sick children at their homes. Besides these, crippled children and many known as "little mothers."

The Treasurer of the society is Mr. A. BARTON HEPBURN, President of the Chase National Bank, to whom those who would sustain this work may send checks; also to Mr. C. LORING BRACE, Secretary, 105 East Twenty-second Street.

ARMAGEDDON.

Mr. ARTHUR BALFOUR, taking up the rôle of alarmist, improves on Lord ROBERTS, Lord ROSEBERY, and their aiders and abettors. There is, according to the leader of his Majesty's Opposition, to be an Armageddon in the German Ocean or the English Channel. It is a good word, Armageddon, whether it means the hill of Mageddon or something else. Some of the profound students of the Apocalypse placed it in the valley of the Euphrates. Thence were to come the Kings from the sunrising, the Kings of the whole world, and the spirits of demons to make war on the great day of the Lord.

Armageddon has not been used lately except by the old-fashioned preachers. But Mr. BALFOUR's identification of the often prophesied encounter between German Dreadnoughts and English Dreadnoughts with the Holy War of ST. JOHN and BUNYAN will strike a responsive chord in the hearts of the great Nonconformist element in Great Britain, and doubtless set many churchmen laboring in behalf of the increased naval appropriations. It is a good idea.

Mr. BALFOUR's Armageddon, however, must seem to outsiders lugged in for political effect. There are no visible signs of war, holy or unholy. Only a few years ago the party of Mr. BALFOUR had on its hands a war which seemed veritably a holy war to the handful of people the forces of Great Britain were crushing in South Africa, and to many of Mr. BALFOUR's fellow-countrymen the unholiest of wars. The party now in power made a great deal of political capital out of that Armageddon. Now it is the turn of the Conservatives and Liberal Unionists to cry war, war, war, and dwell on the danger to the colonies, some of which are now quite old enough and strong enough to take care of themselves. Lord MORLEY yesterday said the English press was largely to blame for the threatened "rebarbarism of Europe, the rattling back into arms." But British statesmen have been doing their share of the mischief.

The Baptist Church's desire to read Prof. GEORGE B. FOSTER, author of "The Function of Religion in Man's Struggle for Existence," out of its Conference is perfectly understandable. If he believes what he writes, he disbelieves what the Baptist Church preaches. But Prof. FOSTER is reported to be preparing to fight for his continuance in the Conference. It is the old story, often repeated. Prof. FOSTER, having changed his views, expects the whole Church to change with him. No doubt he has in view the reformation of all the denominations on an ethical basis. But his position is extremely illogical. The Baptists, holding to their creed, cannot tolerate him as a Baptist, however much they may honor him as a student and thinker and man of letters. Clearly he can serve his own cause best, and the cause of Christian ethics, too, by retiring from the Conference.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Efficient if Not Organized.

It is most confusing for the mind to read about the arrests of blackmailers out in Ohio, and then to compare the details given of what seems to be a great organization, covering a good part of this country and extending to Europe, with the very positive and reiterated assurances, given by people who ought to know, that there is no such thing as a Black Hand Society.

Of course, on the one hand, it is necessary to guard against the common tendency of detectives to exaggerate the importance of their captives in order to win greater glory for the work done in capturing them, but also it is necessary to remember that racial pride counts for something when there arises the necessity to explain a long series of crimes all committed by men of the same origin. Making due allowance for both of these influences, the fact stands out clearly that there are groups of criminals operating according to a common plan in several parts of the United States—wherever immigrants from Southern Italy are numerous—and that it would be the most natural thing in the world for somebody of executive ability to bring these groups into a relation more or less close.

The most trustworthy authorities insist that this has not been done—that the groups which are extorting money from the honest Italians are mere chance collections of low-class ruffians, without the intelligence required for forming an organization of any kind. This may be so, but if it is the little bands show a wonderful efficiency in producing results which, one would think, were beyond attainment by any men not working systematically under competent leadership and strict discipline. Whether or not there is a Black Hand, in the sense of a widespread society, there is something which is as effective as such a society could be, and therefore the uncertainty seems to be merely a matter of name and definition.

Obviously, the Ohio group extended its operations over a wide territory, kept records of its proceedings, and divided its spoils with some regard to the relative skill, activity, and success of its members. They conducted a large correspondence and were well supplied with money of mysterious origin. Whether one of them committed or was concerned in the murder of Lieut. PETROSINO remains to be proved. The confidence of the detectives in the theory that they have the right man will have to be confirmed by more evidence than has yet been disclosed.

Sympathy Demanded for Firemen.

New York's firemen, judging from the occasional glimpses one gets of them when sitting at the doors of their stations or while tearing through the streets in answer to alarms, seem to be a particularly healthy and vigorous lot, an impression which the frequent stories of their prowess while at work tend strongly to confirm. That theirs is a business that frequently involves the running of great risks to life and limb is well known, and it is easy to believe that they often lose sleep and that their meals are apt to be taken at irregular times. It is also known that they have many periods when, though on duty, they have little to do, and the fact that there are always eager applicants, waiting to join the force, does more than hint that it has its compensations.

Yet a writer in Democracy, a paper which looks out for the interests of men in the municipal service, presents a most gloomy picture of the fireman's lot, and insists that he is the victim of treatment at once injurious to himself and expensive to the city. Statistics presented in the article show, if correct, that the sick rate among the members of the fire-fighting corps is not only appallingly high, considered in the abstract, and without regard to injuries and fatalities suffered in the direct line of duty, but that it much exceeds that of firemen in other cities, and especially in London. Preventable diseases, including consumption, are declared to be present among the men to a degree far beyond that revealed by other urban groups selected with no such care as this force is.

If these charges are true, of course they indicate that something is radically wrong in the management of the Fire Department—something which could and should be remedied. One glimpses here and there in the article, however, the suggestion that its object is to bring about the introduction of the three-platoon system or an analogy of it. Yet much that it contains is alarmingly plausible. But is it true that the pension system is of no value to the men, since not one in a hundred of them survives the twenty years of service required before its advantages are available? Investigation of that point might serve as a good test of the accuracy of the other statements made in the article.

Good Roads in New Jersey.

New Jersey, which already has many miles of admirable roads, including not a few constructed with reference to the character of present-day traffic, is constantly adding to the number, and its latest plan is for a dustless highway from Trenton to the coast. New York State, too, has spent not a few millions for roads that were good while they lasted, and it has in view the spending of other millions, but the fact remains that we lag far behind several of our neighbors in this highly important respect and that not infrequently the traveler can tell when he crosses the State line because then he exchanges tolerable or good roads for those that would be open to just criticism if found in the outskirts of a mining camp or even of an African village.

And the very worst of our roads, at least for the automobilist, are those which once were good, but have been allowed to go to ruin for lack of timely repairing. We have not yet arrived at the point of effectively realizing that a good road needs attention from the day of its completion, and that if it is to remain good more or less work must be done on each mile of it every day thereafter. Our plan is to do nothing until it becomes practically impassable, and then to build a road. Brilliant examples of what results from following that criminally expensive policy are to be found in particular abundance in the immediate vicinity of New York City, and not a few of them are within the metropolitan limits.

A NATIONAL GEM.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Nations and States are represented by floral symbols, as, for example, "France has the lily, England the rose," while New York State, as the result of a vote taken among public school pupils, also has the rose, as Pennsylvania, by a similar election, has the goldenrod, and Ohio the scarlet carnation. Kansas, by action of the State Legislature, is represented by the sunflower.

Why not have the United States and each of our States represented by a gem?

Let the election be by the school children, and, if such action can be secured, let the States' legislators ratify the choice of the coming men and women of America. The agitation and discussion of the subject would tend to concentrate the attention of school children upon precious stones, and through the study of these beauties of nature, upon mineralogy and geology, to the educational betterment of the children.

To encourage the offering of further suggestions I will present one. How would the sapphire, most beautiful and valuable of blue gems, serve to represent our country? There are white sapphires as well as blue, and these, if combined with the ruby, which is the same mineral as the sapphire—corundum—would give us the red, white, and blue. Or why not the new gem mineral kunzite? This is an original American gem, discovered within a decade at Pala, Cal. This beautiful lilac or pink amethystine colored spodumene is named after an American, Dr. George Frederic Kunz, the highest authority on gems in America, if not in the world.

New York City might be represented by the rich red garnet, which has been found in the rocks of Manhattan Island, in large and beautiful crystals, too.

Whether Ireland has the emerald copyrighted or not I do not know, but this gem of the first rank is likely to prove a strong candidate for representative honors.

Shall we have a National gem? If so, what is it to be? JULIUS WODISKA.

FERRIES FOR VEHICLES.

Thinks They Should Be Used for This Traffic Only.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an engineer who worked many years in the Department of Docks and Ferries, I would like to say that I do not think that we have grasped the ferry problem yet. The ferry as a means of communication bears favorable comparison as regards cost to the city with the bridges. A twenty-million-dollar bridge represents at 4 per cent. an annual loss to the city of $4,000,000, and there are many others—this not counting one red cent for maintenance, operation, or repairs.

We have three means of connecting the different portions of the city where divided by water, viz.: Ferry, bridge, or tunnel. The most modern and the best means of communication is the last, both on account of low cost of maintenance, but also on account of quickness of transit. But up to the present we have used tunnels only for railroad transit, and this leaves the problem of wheel or vehicular traffic to be provided for either by ferry or bridge. The dwellers across the East River are well off, because they have all three means of transportation. I think the problem of East River ferries should be solved by making them merely freight ferries, for wheel traffic, of course, taking what few passengers may be willing to use them.

As regards Staten Island, I suggested to the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce, of which I was a member many years ago, that it work for a ferry service at St. George, which would be purely a passenger service, with boats like the Monmouth and an occasional freight boat between, and to have freight ferries at Stapleton and West Brighton or Port Richmond, taking, of course, passengers if they wished. I think this is still the solution of the problem.

But the most modern, up-to-date means of transriver transportation is the tunnel and a freight ferry service until we advance far enough to have tunnels for wheel and pedestrian traffic, as well as for train service by rail. CIVIL ENGINEER.

SCHOOLGIRLS' LATE HOURS.

Says They Are Due to Dr. Felter's Curriculum.

In the article headed "Bed Time for School Girls," in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Monday, June 7, Dr. William L. Felter, principal of the Girls' High School, Brooklyn, conveys the idea that "seemingly bright girls were lagging behind in the daily march of the school, with corresponding fault at the examination periods," and attributes the deplorable condition to the fact that most of the girls did not retire before 10:30 o'clock or later, and suggests as a remedy that they should be in bed by 9:30 o'clock.

Dr. Felter might have extended his investigation a little further and learned why, at this time, so many of the girls retire at such late hours. Had he done so the article would have thrown a limelight upon one of our important educational institutions costing the city thousands of dollars a year, and in the product of which the parents sending their children there are greatly disappointed, if not grossly deceived.

Dr. Felter's article should have said that, owing to the variety of subjects, useful and otherwise, imposed upon the girls in our High School, to study only half of which would take more time than is left to them after school hours, even bright girls are lagging and must continue to lag in their school work, and in their endeavor to make any showing at all they are obliged to stay up until late hours in the night and forego the pleasure of recreation. DANGEROUS EXITS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have noticed particularly the dangerous exits of the Broadway Division of the Subway, to wit: Columbus Circle and Seventy-second Street, not to mention others in the same category.

At the former station I saw a person emerge from the exit and after stepping from the curb was just about to meet a speeding automobile when his quickwittedness stopped him in his tracks. It was only by the slightest margin that a collision was avoided. The station, as it were, cuts off the view until you are right on the street and gives you and the approaching driver no opportunity for avoiding an accident.

Of course, those stations which are built in the middle of a thoroughfare ought to have been constructed on each side of the street. However, I imagine the Rapid Transit Commission was striving for economy and apparently did not foresee the difficulty above cited.

The attention of the company no doubt has been called to this danger, inasmuch as it has placed railings at the stations above mentioned as a warning. But these railings are by no means applicable to the exigencies of the situation. ALFRED RANDALL-HOFLER.

THE COLOR LINE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is true that the American Federation of Labor does not draw the color line on negroes, but it does draw the race line on both Chinese and Japanese. In the South the unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, however, do draw the color line. Negroes are not admitted to membership in white unions, nor are the negroes permitted to attend their meetings. They are encouraged to form unions of their own.

Morris Brown in to-day's TIMES thinks that it is right to bar Chinese and Japanese from membership in unions. Some of Mr. Brown's Socialist comrades recently denied in THE TIMES that Socialists indorsed the restriction of Asiatic immigration, on the ground that Socialism stood for the "Brotherhood of Man," &c. I am curious to know whether Socialist Brown indorses the trades union programme or the half-baked Socialist Party programme, or whether, being a good Socialist, he can indorse both programmes, and all other programmes which have "union" or "Socialism" as a prefix. How about it, Mr. Brown?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to the question upon gooseberries, there are two classes, the English and the American. The English are very large in size and excellent for preserving; but in our country, with its cool nights and hot days, they are subject to a disease known as powdry mildew, hence are not generally grown.

Of the American varieties, which are not so large, but finer in quality, the Downing, Red Jacket, and Pearl, which originated in Canada, are among the best.

They should be planted in a rich soil, where a good circulation of air may be had, pruned regularly, sprayed with one ounce of potassium sulphide in two gallons of water to prevent mildew, and to destroy the currant worm, which is its chief enemy, with one ounce of arsenate of lead in two gallons of water.

Sixteen hundred plants may be grown on an acre of land, which, under good culture, should yield 10,000 quarts, and sell for $1,000, less 40 per cent. for cost of cultivation and marketing.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In regard to Mr. Algernon Sartoris's forced resignation from the Diplomatic Service as announced at Washington yesterday, I have been requested to state to you that there is no truth in the story emanating from Washington that Mr. Sartoris divulged information contained in the archives of the American Legation at Guatemala, which information formed the basis of a recent article, published over my signature in the June number of Uncle Sam's Magazine.

It is a fact that I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Sartoris in Guatemala last year, but I am in no wise indebted to Mr. Sartoris for any information gained by me concerning our diplomatic affairs there.

This explanation has already been made by me to the State Department. I send the same statement to you in justice to Mr. Sartoris.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In "Is Shakespeare Dead?" Mark Twain argues that Shakespeare was either a lawyer or not the author of the works which go under his name. To the student of Shakespeare this must appear (with all due respect to the learned Mr. Twain) silly. Might he not, with equal reason, claim that Shakespeare must have been a doctor, a warrior, a priest, a King, a fool, a woman, or any other of the many types of beings he so marvelously created, or else incapable of producing such works? In this instance, it appears to me, Mark Twain has o'erleaped himself and fallen on the wrong side.

Foods Must Be Platonized.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your anti-vegetarian article to-day is far behind the times, if not THE TIMES. You insist upon a savage and phlegmatique diet, ignoring the race movement toward mental and wireless conditions and powers. Foods must be Platonized to accord with Thought tendencies. Hypatia, Pythagoras, and the over souls ate no bloody steaks and gory carcasses. Oil, honey, olives, nuts, lentils, fruits, and grains are the fitting evolution of foods, the higher alimentation. Try salads with oil, salads of vegetable protein, (like the pulses,) and you will soon feel disgust at your former cannibalism. MIND.

If a person attending services in a Catholic church desires more air, all he has to do is to request the usher to open a few more windows, and his request will be complied with.

The citizen who complains does not seem to realize that death can come to those in church from any other cause than poor ventilation.

A SHOCKING CONFESSION.

Some day, mayhap, deep thought I'll bring
To this: "Can any bird enthrall
With song as does the thrush, sweet king
Of all?"

Yet, stay!—the lark; that 'tis a fine
Musician has been proved, to wit:
By Mr. Shakespeare Bacon's line
To it.

Dame Nature's Jenny Lind, the night-

Be slighted!—nor the wren, Great Scott!
Nor—let me see—do linnets chant
Or not?

Thus may I talk some day; I'm mum
Because—I can't tell one bird from
The next!

ALL IN READINESS FOR BRIDGE JUBILEE

HUGHES THE CHIEF SPEAKER

All Traffic on the Structure to be Stopped for the Fireworks To-morrow Night.

In spite of the unpropitious wind and weather, rapid progress has been made in the preparations for the Queensboro Bridge celebration to-morrow. By to-night hundreds of flags and thousands of yards of bunting will flutter in the breeze.

With every detail of the programme for the parade, the formal ceremonies, and other exercises in final shape, the Celebration Committee will give itself up to-day to the completion of the decorations, a big undertaking in itself, and the final touches to the grand stand, stadium, and other centres of activity on the seven days of jollification.

To-morrow's exercises divide themselves into five sections, the addresses and other ceremonies at the Long Island plaza of the bridge marking the formal opening of the structure at 11 o'clock; the military, civic, political, and industrial parade, starting at 12:30 o'clock from Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, Manhattan; fireworks for two hours on the bridge, with an illumination of the Long Island plaza, at 8 o'clock; the opening performance of the comic opera, "The Mocking Bird," sung by amateur performers of Long Island, and the announcement of the prize winners in the parade, at 8:30 o'clock.

The official exercises by which the bridge will be formally set apart as the new link between the sister Boroughs of Manhattan and Queens will not last more than two hours. They will be held on the grand stand, which will be completed this afternoon, at the Long Island plaza of the bridge, with a seating capacity of 5,000 persons. President McGowan of the Board of Aldermen, representing Mayor McClellan, will receive the tender of the bridge from Bridge Commissioner Stevenson, under whose direction it was completed. Mr. McGowan, oratorically at least, will turn over the 50,000 tons of steel to Borough Presidents Ahearn of Manhattan and Gresser of Queens. The capstone address of the occasion will then be delivered by Gov. Hughes.

The parade, starting in Manhattan at 12:30 o'clock, will be timed to reach the grand stand an hour later, just as Gov. Hughes is completing his address. The party of officials and guests, including Secretary of War Dickinson, who has been asked by President Taft to represent him, will spend the next hour or so reviewing the marching thousands of National Guardsmen, regulars, marines, and jackies in line and the miles of historical and industrial floats which they precede. While the parade is passing the guests will be entertained also by the singing of 1,500 schoolgirls seated on the grand stand and arrayed to represent a huge American flag.

The line of march of the parade will be from Thirty-fourth Street up Fifth Avenue to Fifty-seventh Street, east in Fifty-seventh Street to Second Avenue, north in Second Avenue two squares to the Manhattan entrance to the bridge. Thousands of persons will be allowed on the bridge while the parade is passing over it, but police will be stationed at intervals of every ten feet to prevent crowding, rowdyism, and danger to the spectators. When as many have passed to the bridge promenade as the Police Inspectors in command believe may do so with safety the entrances will be closed until after the parade has passed.

Since the first publication of the plans of the parade so many additions in organizations and floats have been made that the Marshal has been forced to lengthen the line of march in Long Island City so that the disbandment will take place in Fifth Street, Long Island City, instead of in the plaza in front of the County Court House. The effect of this change will be to extend the parade through practically all the principal streets of Long Island City, giving an opportunity to the Queens and Long Island contingent to see the whole parade without having to come to Manhattan.

Chairman William H. Williams, Jr., of the Celebration Committee, has now but one request to make. He asks for fair weather—sunshine and plenty of it, with a temperature of about 65 degrees. He is more than satisfied with the enthusiasm with which the residents of Long Island City, Astoria, Steinway, and other communities in Queens have flung out the flags and bunting. The buildings along Jackson Avenue, the principal thoroughfare of Long Island City, will be fairly covered with flags and red, white, and blue bunting.

The committee has made every arrangement it could think of for public comfort. Drinking fountains and temporary police stations have been erected, the latter mainly for lost children. Ambulance surgeons will be kept on hand during the exercises to give treatment to such as may need it. A special squad of policemen will accompany the Queens Borough school children across the river to Manhattan on the chartered ferryboats when they go to take their place in the parade to see that none gets hurt. Competent architects will examine every stand and tent erected, and the concession will be immediately revoked if any is found unsafe.

The concessionaires have already blossomed out in great numbers at the Long Island end of the bridge. Wild animal shows, freak shows, vaudevilles, the cane, knife, and other ringers, and almost every other kind of money separator known even to Coney Island, are already on the ground.

Commissioner Stevenson has notified Joseph Morris, who is to have charge of the fireworks display to-morrow night, that all traffic will be stopped from 9 o'clock until the close of the display.

Fire Commissioner Hayes has notified the Union Novelty and Supply Company, which has the contract for the fireworks display, that no bombs or shells must be exploded during the setting off of the display because of the close proximity to the bridge of the various institutions on Blackwell's Island. The Commissioner has no objection to the display showing Niagara Falls, for which the entire bridge will be used.

MORSE'S HOUSE AT AUCTION.

A Creditor Bids It In for $355,000, or $150,000 Under Its Mortgages.

Charles W. Morse's house, at 728 Fifth Avenue, near Fifty-sixth Street, was sold under foreclosure yesterday in the Vesey Street Salesroom by Auctioneer Joseph P. Day. The property was struck down after two bids to the Corporate Organization and Audit Company for $201,000 over a mortgage of $150,000, with accrued interest, a total of about $355,000.

It is generally understood that the purchase was made for the account of the plaintiff in the proceeding, John E. Berwind. Curtis, Mallet-Prevost & Colt, attorneys for the Corporate Organization and Audit Company, also represented Mr. Berwind in the foreclosure suit.

Yesterday's sale developed a deficiency of about $150,000 between the amount of the highest bid and the amount of the claims against the property. There was due on the second mortgage, which was being foreclosed, $380,847, besides the first mortgage of $150,000 and back taxes of $5,245. The house is of the five-story American-basement type, on a lot 27 by 125.

RSE SHOW SEASON PENS AT PLAINFIELD

MRS. GUMMEY A VICTOR

Richard P. McGrann and Paul A. Sorg Also Among the Leading Ribbon Winners—Club's Sixth Show.

The first of the big Eastern horse shows opened yesterday at Plainfield, N. J., where an attractive programme was marred by the inclement weather. It was the sixth annual exhibition of the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, and the entry list included many of the best-known show horses now on the Summer circuit. From a one-day show, the Plainfield annual event has grown to be one of the leading Summer horse shows. Society has set its seal of approval on the exhibition, and many prominent persons defied the rain yesterday to attend the first day's judging.

No more attractive setting could be found for a horse show. The grounds are located in the heart of one of the most attractive sections of New Jersey, and just near enough to New York to bring a big gathering from this city. The surrounding country also contributed its quota to the social throng, and, despite the rain and raw atmosphere, the stands and boxes were well filled. Secretary Lewis G. Timpson provided a most attractive programme of events, and the big entry list attested to his energetic work in bringing together a magnificent array of equine beauties.

Among those in the grand stand and parking spaces were:

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Waring, Capt. and Mrs. Humphreys, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Runkle, Mr. and Mrs. Frank De Lacey Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Tilney, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Butler, Miss Kaufman, Miss Rowland, Miss Munger, Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Bedford, Miss Emily H. Bedford, Mr. and Mrs. Henry McGee, Mrs. Reeve H. Stockton, Miss Helen Cruikshank, Miss Mabel S. Hooley, Mr. and Mrs. Louis H. Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley, Mrs. Leon Moran, Mrs. Charles J. Fisk, Miss Annie Fisk, Miss Dorothy Fisk, Miss Helen Timson, Miss Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Lemuel W. Lowell, Mrs. Edward M. Van Buren, Mrs. George V. Beaton, Mrs. Henry C. Irons, Mrs. J. C. Gilbert, Mrs. T. D. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Vail, Mrs. D. F. Ginner, Mrs. William D. Buttfield, Mr. and Mrs. Charles McCutcheon, Mrs. O. T. Waring, W. L. Saunders, J. H. Welan, Udo M. Fleischman, Charles M. Fleischman, Mr. and Mrs. Tonzo Sauvage, Mrs. Arthur Ottorson, Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Sorg, Mr. and Mrs. Richard S. McGrann, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Harriman, Mrs. H. C. Bowen, Mrs. Sophie D. Gummey, Miss Margaret W. McCutcheon, Joseph Larocque, Moses G. Byers, Newton O. Dunster, Jesse M. Eddy, Mrs. W. Stanton Elliott, Hugh Gormley, Miss Bernice Halloway, Harry D. Halloway, Miss Mabel J. Hooley, George Willing, S. Taber Willetts, Eugene Von Bach, Miss Clara Eloise Sherin, Clarence F. Sherin, Joseph J. Ryan, Mrs. Thomas J. Regan, Rufus L. Paterson, David M. Newberger, Andrew Morison, Otto H. Kahn, W. E. Lowe, O. T. Waring, B. A. Hegeman, E. H. Ladd, Jr., W. P. Smith, G. P. Melleck, H. G. Runkle, and H. M. Stockton.

So closely were the entries matched that in many of the classes the judges were put on their mettle to select the winners. Richard P. McGrann, the owner of the Grand View Farms of Pennsylvania, and Paul A. Sorg captured the majority of the ribbons, while Mrs. Sophie D. Gummey of Philadelphia figured prominently among the prize winners.

Nala, J. W. Harriman's champion, was hard pressed to beat Paul A. Sorg's attractive brown gelding Ben Hur, while in the pony class Mr. McGrann's bay gelding Brookdale Sir Horace was only slightly inferior to the Avondale Farms entry, Lady Eccles.

JUST ONE A DAY

How the Coffee Drinker Compromises His Health.

If coffee really don't hurt why not drink more? There is but one answer and that is coffee does hurt them and they know it. When they drink it once a day they compromise with their enemy. There are people whom one cup of coffee a day will put in bed if the habit be continued.

"Although warned by physicians to let coffee alone I have always been so fond of it that I continued to use it," confesses an Ohio lady. "I compromised with myself and drank just one cup every morning until about six weeks ago.

"All the time I was drinking coffee I had heart trouble that grew steadily worse and finally I had such alarming sensations in my head (sometimes causing me to fall down) that I at last took my doctor's advice and quit coffee and began to use Postum in its place.

"The results have been all that the doctor hoped, for I have not only lost my craving for coffee and enjoy my good Postum just as well, but my heart trouble has ceased, and I have no more dizzy spells in my head. I feel better in every way and consider myself a very fortunate woman to have found the truth about Postum."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

SHUBERT'S BOSTON THEARTE.

BOSTON, Mass., June 10.—That Boston will have another theatre is evident in the sale to-day of the property owned by the Charles H. Bond estate, 263 to 267 Tremont Street, running through to Warrenton Street and Seaver Place, to the Shubert Holding Company of New York. This property was purchased by Mr. Bond for the site of his Lyric Theatre, but the idea was abandoned by the trustees of the estate, owing to the sudden death of Mr. Bond.

DR. E. E. HALE DEAD; WAS 87 YEARS OLD

A LONG CAREER OF SERVICE

Died in Boston, Where He Was Born—Tributes from the President, Senator Lodge, and Mark Twain.

BOSTON, June 10.—The Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, preacher, writer, editor, and Chaplain of the United States Senate, died at his home in Roxbury to-day. News of his death shocked Boston to an unusual degree, because comparatively few knew that Dr. Hale was ill. A week ago he was present at a celebration in honor of the ninetieth birthday of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, his contemporary in many of the reform movements with which Dr. Hale had been identified for more than fifty years.

To his family, however, it had been apparent for some time that his health was failing. A few days ago his condition became alarming. His great age, 87 years, militated against him. Yet he was up and about his apartment yesterday. In fact, he had not been confined to his bed at any stage of his illness. He retired at the usual time last night, but his physician had noted evidences that led him to warn the immediate members of the family that the end was not far off.

On this account he was not left alone. As the night passed Dr. Hale constantly became weaker until the end came about 3 o'clock this morning. His wife, Philip L. Hale, his son, who is an artist; Ellen, his daughter, and the family physician were at the bedside.

> Mrs. Taft and I extend to you our heartfelt sympathy in your great sorrow, and deeply regret the loss which the whole community suffers in the death of such an upholder and staunch advocate of sweetness and light, the liberal but truly religious spirit, Christian charity and tolerance, the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God.

"As author, preacher, and citizen," said Gov. Eben S. Draper to-day, "Dr. Hale represented our highest type. His goodness, great-heartedness, and broad-minded judgment of men of all creeds and classes was magnificent and peculiar to himself. Massachusetts and the Nation suffer a great loss in his death."

Mourned in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—The news of the death of Dr. Hale was received in the Senate with general expressions of regret.

Dr. Hale received his appointment as Chaplain of the Senate in 1903 through Sentaor Frye, who at that time was acting as Vice President. The selection was made at the instance of Senator Hoar, who had been his lifelong personal friend.

Dr. Hale always wore a long clerical robe when officiating, and it was his habit to repeat the Lord's Prayer. For many years after he assumed his office he used to ask the Senators to join with him in doing so, though at last, after repeated failures to obtain a response, he ceased to make the request. As long as he was able, Dr. Hale made it a practice to visit the Senators at their seats, and he was personally known to all of them.

BALTIMORE, June 10.—Mark Twain, who was at Catonsville, a western suburb of Baltimore, to-day, said of the death of Edward Everett Hale:

"I had the greatest esteem and respect for Edward Everett Hale, and the greatest admiration for his work. I am as grieved to hear of his death as I can ever be to hear of the death of any friend, though my grief is always tempered with the satisfaction of knowing that for him the hard, bitter struggle of life is ended."

Dr. Hale's Long Career.

Edward Everett Hale was the last of that brilliant group of men who were known as the New England school in American literature. He was a friend of Emerson, Whittier, Phillips Brooks, and all the intellectual leaders of New England in the middle of the last century. Born in Boston in a house on the site of the present Parker House on April 3, 1822, his grandfather, Enoch Hale, was a brother of Nathan Hale, the Revolutionary patriot, who as he was about to be hanged as a spy declared that his only sorrow was that he had only one life to give to his country. Dr. Hale's father, who was also named Nathan Hale, was a man of liberal education, active disposition, and great public spirit, a civil engineer, and the first President of the Boston & Worcester Railroad. He was also the editor and proprietor of The Boston Advertiser and did a general printing business, in which his boys as they grew up took an interest. Mrs. Hale was a sister of the orator and statesman, Edward Everett.

Edward Everett Hale received his first schooling in the Boston Latin School, long a famous institution, and he was only 17 years old when he graduated from Harvard. Three years later he was licensed to preach as a Unitarian, and his first regular pastorate was in Worcester, Mass. He became pastor of the South Congregational Church in Boston in 1856, and remained in that post until shortly before he was appointed as Chaplain of the Senate in 1903.

Since he was ordained, sixty-six years ago, Dr. Hale had always held broad religious views. He was not inclined to set forth his confession of faith, rather his life expressed his creed. A story told by Booker T. Washington shows how practically Dr. Hale put his teachings into every-day life.

"I was in Boston once," said the negro educator, "carrying two large satchels, which were almost too heavy for my strength. No one offered to help me until a kindly looking gentlemen proffered his assistance. I afterward learned that he was Edward Everett Hale."

He was an indefatigable worker and was among the foremost preachers and philanthropists in America. His story, "The Man Without a Country" brought him into world-wide fame. But this was only one of many of his books. He wrote novels, histories, essays, ballads, and short stories, of which the following are the most important perhaps: "The Man Without a Country," "Ten Times One is Ten," "Margaret Percival in America," "In His Name," "Mr. Tangier's Vacations," "Mrs. Merriman's Scholars," "His Level Best," "The Ingham Papers," "Ups and Downs," "Philip Nolan's Friends," "Fortunes of Rachel," "Four and Five," "Crusoe in New York," "Christmas Eve and Christmas Day," "Christmas in Narragansett," "Our Christmas in a Palace," "Sketches in Christian History," "Kansas and Nebraska," "What Career?" "Boys' Heroes," "The Story of Masachusetts," "Sybaris and Other Homes," "For Fifty Years," "A New England Boyhood," "Chautauquan History of the United States," "If Jesus Came to Boston," "Memories of a Hundred Years," "Ralph Waldo Emerson," "We the People," "New England Ballads," "Prayers in the United States Senate," and "Foundation of the Republic."

He was one of the preachers of Harvard and one of its Board of Overseers. He was at one time editor of The Christian Examiner, and he originated and edited The Old and New Magazine, much to his own financial detriment, and that of those associated with him in the enterprise. His minor editorial ventures were many and various and his contributions to periodical literature were a steady stream.

Tall, with stooping shoulders and a deep lined and strong featured face, his appearance was so striking that it drew the eyes of strangers to him. Like Carlyle, he had a fine contempt for clothes and his favorite headgear was a broad-brimmed felt hat.

He married Emily Baldwin Perkins at Hartford, Conn., on Oct. 13, 1852. His wife was a niece of Henry Ward Beecher. Their spacious house in Roxbury was famous for its comfort and hospitality.

As Dr. Hale's age advanced his friends delighted to celebrate his birthdays. Especially noteworthy were the occasions of his seventieth and eightieth anniversaries, at both of which public meetings were held. In 1892 a purse of $5,000 was given him, while in 1902 a fund of $28,000 was raised.

Dr. Hale gave a memorable interview on the occasion of his eighty-fifth birthday, in which he said in part:

"In my case my vocation first, second, and last is that of a minister of the Gospel. My avocation has been literature. I have always tried to write on subjects of which I knew something, and I have the greatest scorn for what is called literature where the writer throws himself into the field as a fencing master might do, or any soldier of fortune; where the writer knows how to write and has noththing to write about; where, in short, he has nothing to say. But to say what a man has to say, to tell what he has seen, that is the real province of literature."

SOTHERN AS SHYLOCK.

He and Miss Marlowe Enthusiastically Received in New Roles.

The Duke of Venice	William Harris
The Prince of Morocco	Eric Blind
Antonio	Thomas Coleman
Bassanio	Frederick Lewis
Salanio	P. T. Kelly
Salarino	John Taylor
Gratiano	Vincent Sternroyd
Lorenzo	Pedro De Cordoba
Shylock	Mr. Sothern
Tubal	Frank Reicher
Launcelot Gobbo	Rowland Buckstone
Old Gobbo	Malcolm Bradley
Leonardo	Harry Turnley
Balthasar	Frederick Roland
Gaoler	Harry Rabon
Portia	Miss Marlowe
Nerissa	Norah Lamison
Jessica	Helena Head

An audience that taxed the capacity of the Academy of Music witnessed the performance of E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe and their company in "The Merchant of Venice" last night. Like other plays in which the two stars have appeared this season, last night's performance was extended until after midnight. Their reception was enthusiastic.

Mr. Sothern's interpretation of the rôle of Shylock is considered to be among the most artistic of his delineations. In the big scenes, particularly the trial scene in the fourth act, where Shylock is thwarted by the youthful and fertile-minded Portia, he was at his best, for Sothern's art of character delineation lies even more in the interpretation of the deeper notes of human sorrow and suffering than in the lighter veins of love and romance. His Shylock is strongly suggestive of certain scenes in his Richelieu, and even his makeup is not dissimilar to that which he makes of the stately hero of Lytton's drama.

Julia Marlowe shared equal honors with her co-star in her delineation of Portia. She made of the character a woman of great personal beauty as well as masterful intellect. The casket scene was rendered with great charm and grace, and Miss Marlowe was fortunate in having an actor of the experience and facility of Frederic Lewis to play Bassanio. Miss Marlowe's delivery of the "mercy" speech in the famous trial scene was equal to anything she has ever done upon the stage.

Helena Head was a captivating Jessica, and Rowland Buckstone made of Launcelot Gobbo a clown funny enough to be a modern comedian. The whole company in fact played their parts with admirable esprit and tact.

"The Merchant of Venice" will be given the rest of the week, except this afternoon, when, by request, a special performance of "Romeo and Juliet" will be given.

BIG NEW THEATRE TO GO UP IN HARLEM

TO BE COMBINATION HOUSE

New Structure Will Be Run Along the Same Lines as the Grand Opera House.

Harlem is soon to have one of the largest theatres in the city, to be put up by John H. Springer, who has been lessee of the Grand Opera House for the last fifteen years.

The new playhouse may be built at the northwest corner of Seventh Avenue and 123d Street, where Mr. Springer was said yesterday to have acquired a site covering ten lots, fronting 100 feet on the avenue and 250 feet on the street. The properties there include 2,062 to 2,070 Seventh Avenue, five-story flats, owned by Anna L. Daly and Mary J. Cunningham, and the ten adjoining dwellings, known as 201 to 219 West 123d Street.

"It is true," said Mr. Springer last night, "that I shall build a new Opera House in Harlem. I have three plots of ground under consideration, all near 125th Street and Seventh Avenue. I shall decide which one I shall take within a few days. Within two months construction will be begun, and the new theatre will be opened on the last day of this year.

"It is to be run along the same lines as the Grand Opera House, as a combination house for Harlem. The attractions which play in the downtown theatres will play in my new theatre—of course, a new attraction each week. The new house is to cost $600,000, and will be modern in every particular. It will seat 2,500 persons, which makes it a larger house than the Grand, and the stage will have every improvement. The complete plans for the theatre will be ready within a few days.

"My lease on the Grand Opera House expires next May, but I have other plans in view. In fact, when I open my new Harlem theatre I shall control altogether three theatres."

Mr. Springer's lease of the Grand Opera House expires in May, 1910. The new theatre on upper Seventh Avenue, which, it is understood, will be used as a combination house, will probably be ready for opening in the early Fall of next year. Cohan & Harris recently obtained a five years' lease of the Grand Opera House, at an annual rental of $55,000.

ORDERS SHUBERT FROM PLAY.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 10.—Lee Shubert, Mr. and Mrs. Lew Fields, and A. Toxon Worm, press representative for the Shuberts, were ordered out of the Apollo Theatre, where they had purchased seats to witness the production of the "Follies of 1908," this evening.

Mr. Shubert and his party went to the theatre early. Word had been received to-day by Mr. Ziegfeld that Mr. Shubert had started for Atlantic City. He felt certain, he says, that Mr. Shubert would try to see his show, and therefore gave orders to the Treasurer that no tickets were to be sold to Mr. Shubert on any account.

But in some way or other the Shubert party got the tickets and went to the theatre early. It was almost time for the curtain to go up before they were discovered by Mr. Ziegfeld and Mr. Erlanger. Mr. Ziegfeld immediately sent word to the manager of the house, Frederick E. Moore, that he would not ring up the curtain until Mr. Shubert left the theatre.

Mr. Moore personally went to Mr. Shubert and asked him to leave the house. Mr. Shubert refused. Then the Assistant Manager of the house asked Mr. Shubert to leave. He still refused. Mr. Ziegfeld, it is alleged, then sent his personal representative and the special officer of the house with a notice to Mr. Shubert that if he did not leave the theatre peaceably he would be forced out. Under this threat, and out of respect to Mrs. Fields, Mr. Shubert then left. All the members of his party went with him, and then the show started.

Mr. Ziegfeld was seen after the incident, which created no little excitement, and asked his reason for refusing Mr. Shubert admission to the house.

"Because Mr. Shubert has refused to permit me to enter his houses," was the reply. "He has seen fit to deny me admission to any of his theatres, and only a short time ago sent word to Mr. Siegel, a friend of mine, to the effect that if I accompanied him to the theatre I would be stopped at the door.

"I sent word to Mr. Worm and Mr. and Mrs. Fields that they were welcome to stay in the house. I have nothing in the world against them, and would have been glad to have them to-day. But as long as Shubert attempts to bar me from his plays, I shall return his treatment in kind.

"The difference between Shubert and me is of long standing, and dates back to the time he made an offer to my wife (Anna Held) for her services while she was playing in France. She ordered him from the theatre where she was playing."

Mr. Shubert could not be seen at his hotel, but Mr. Worm said he felt that he had been outraged by the treatment he had received. He declined to discuss Mr. Ziegfeld's statement that it was a mere matter of retaliation.

SEPP, THE HISTORIAN, DEAD.

Johannes Nepomuk Sepp, the noted religious historian, is dead in Munich in his ninety-third year. Sixty years ago, through his antagonism to Lola Montez, the favorite of King Ludwig, and through his subsequent banishment from Munich, Prof. Sepp of Munich University, as he was then called, was one of the most prominent figures in Bavaria.

He was born at Tolz, studied philosophy and theology in Munich, and during his twenty-ninth and thirtieth years traveled extensively in the East. He was made Professor of History as soon as he returned to Munich University. But he had held his chair hardly a year when Lola Montez, the Scotch adventuress, came to Munich. Posing as a Spanish dancer, she organized the dissipated students into a society called the Alemannia. So great an influence did she gain over the King that he made her Countess Langsfeld.

Sepp protested against her court influence, and was deprived of his professorship, and, for three years was in exile. In 1850, when the Court favorite was deposed, he was reinstated. He continued to teach history at Munich for seventeen years. He was elected at various times to the Frankfort Parliament, the German Customs Parliament, and the Bavarian Parliament. He was one of the first advocates of Bismarck's United Germany idea. He wrote many books on Bavarian history, but his principal works were on the subject of Christianity and its founder, one of which was "The Life of Jesus Christ."

HILL SHARES THE FEATURE

In price movements on the Stock Exchange yesterday there appeared to be very little reflection of the really important news of the day, which was to be found in the authoritative announcements regarding the opening of additional plants by the steel companies, owing to an influx of inquiries which included at least 250,000 tons of steel rails valued at above $7,000,000, the cleaning up of surplus copper stocks, and a sharp break in the price of July wheat in Chicago, a development accompanied by most encouraging reports on crop conditions from all sections of the country. Technical conditions, comprising further liquidation of weakly held securities, speculative enterprise in a restricted number of issues and genuine buying in still other directions on a fairly substantial scale, were the controlling factors on the Exchange. Rumors, denied on authority, of a holding company for the Hill roads were used to lift the prices of Great Northern and Northern Pacific, and indefinite reports of as little value were also made use of, in all bringing about the early and marked rise in Union Pacific. Industrial shares presented an appearance of real strength, and the theory is coming to prevail in speculative circles that the stocks in this group have as yet by comparison with the railroads failed to discount reviving business. The market closed steady with losses and gains nearly equal numerically and in amount. Grain trade papers were unanimous in favorable comment on the crop position, pointing out the altogether probable betterment since the figures of the Government's report were compiled, and some attention to this comment was apparently paid by grain markets where doubt of the supposed extreme scarcity of wheat for delivery on July contracts is beginning to make itself felt. In addition to the showing in the steel and iron business already mentioned general improvement in the metal world was exemplified in the figures of the Copper Producers' Association on production and consumption of that metal for the month of May. Production increased 4,781,000 pounds, but an increase of 19,000,049 in consumption offset the increased output and reduced stocks on hand by 13,349,000 pounds. On excellent authority it was reported that the entire June 1 surplus of copper had been sold for delivery between this date and Aug. 1.

Call money rates were below the maximum quotations of the previous day, but still a trifle above the rates lately prevailing. Foreign exchange developed some strength, but no further news regarding gold exports was forthcoming. The Bank of England made an exceptionally good weekly statement, noting increases of above $5,000,000 in gold and $6,000,000 in reserve, and raising the proportion of reserves to liabilities from the 45.61 per cent. figure of last week to 48.70. An interesting item coming over the cables was the report that the output of gold in the Rand for May had been officially placed at 624,498 ounces, with one exception the greatest production recorded.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

PHILADELPHIA, June 10.—Interest still converges, naturally, upon the local traction shares on the local Exchange. The street was full of rumors as to developments in Councils. The volume of trading was much smaller than yesterday, total sales of Rapid Transit for the first three hours being about 10,000 shares. Union Traction kept above 52 on moderate trading. The market closed irregular.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Uncertainty of Tone.

Professional operators, commission house customers, and nearly every one engaged in active trading have been complaining because of the uncertainty of the market's tone, which is up one hour and down the next. This brings forth the expression from every side that they "never saw such a market." This is not an unfamiliar saying in Wall Street. About every so often you are told by various persons who have been more or less directly connected with the stock market movements for anywhere from one to forty years that "this market beats anything I have seen in all my experience." The Wall Street memory is proverbially short, but there is frequently a good deal of truth in the expression. In a general way it might be said that history repeats itself in the stock market, but the same old methods and devices have to be varied to keep up the uncertainty. While the ups and downs occur with more or less regularity it would never do to have every one know just when the turn is about to take place. That would reduce matters to a certainty, and there is no speculation on a certainty. The confusion of opinion is what makes the fluctuations.

More Sensitive to News.

"The market is now getting into a position where it is more sensitive to specific news developments than it was a few weeks ago, when prices were just naturally going up, no matter what happened," remarked a professional trader, who in active times is accustomed to swing from 10,000 to 30,000 shares a day. "There are times when the market continues to go up in the face of bad news, and on other occasions it persists in declining no matter how much bullish information may be disseminated. Then comes a period of halting and uncertainty in fluctuations, pending a readjustment of speculative holdings, and that appears to me to be the stage which the market has now reached. Whether the next big swing will be upward or downward I do not know and I do not attempt to take any definite position under such circumstances. I may buy a thousand or so shares of stock one hour and sell them out the next, or go short, and fifteen minutes after cover at a profit or loss, as the case may be." That seems to be the case with many others.

The Technical Position.

Much talk is now being heard from bearish quarters regarding the alleged weakness of the technical position. This is a subject which to the active trader is of much importance, though not of such vital interest to the man who buys stocks outright or on heavy margin with the idea of holding them for the long pull. The opinion in some quarters is that the market has attracted a large following of traders to whom a three or four-point decline is a serious matter and a ten-point break a cause for nervous prostration. This class might be likened to the foam on top of a wave, which counts for something in the matter of altitude, but is really of little consequence to the general drift of the tide. Such a condition in the stock market makes relatively easy a decline of a few points, or even eight or ten points, without seriously interfering with the general trend of values. To the slimly margined speculative accounts a fall to that extent is a calamity, but it is a mere incident to the great bulk of security holders amply able to protect themselves against such a break, and rarely disturbs fixed investments.

Yesterday afternoon the board room traders explained the reaction in the market, following pronounced strength which had been displayed, especially in some issues, on the ground that an assessment was to be levied on Third Avenue Railroad stock in connection with the reorganization. To most persons this seemed a pretty flimsy pretext, and the natural inquiry was what Third Avenue and its troubles had to do with Reading, Union Pacific, St. Paul, or a score of other railroad and industrial issues. To be sure, Third Avenue broke nearly 3 points, but there has been scarcely an individual in the Wall Street district who for months had not been morally certain that the Third Avenue shareholders would be assessed. Furthermore, it could hardly be said that the stock is so widely held that a decline in that issue might logically precipitate liquidation elsewhere. The incident was regarded by many as simply indicating increased sensitiveness of the market to unfavorable news.

Money and Exchange.

The slightly harder tone manifested by the money market is beginning to divert attention to that section, and yesterday time rates were marked up a shade further, in the face of which foreign exchange recovered quite sharply, two developments of a contradictory nature. In explanation of the advance in exchange which has been going on for the last few days it appears that an unusually large demand for cable remittance has been made for the London settlement, thus showing a greater participation in American stocks by London than many had supposed was the case. An advance in money rates ordinarily means a decline in sterling, but up to this time the interest charges have not become heavy enough to have any great influence on the foreign exchange market. When they do our bankers will begin to think about getting back part of the $50,000,000 gold which has been sent out since last Fall.

THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

LONDON, June 10.—Money was in restricted supply, but the demand was strong on the market to-day. Discounts were firm.

On the Stock Exchange the settlement continues to occupy much attention and price movements early were generally downward, but a recovery occurred later, the good bank statement helping Consols, while the more cheerful Paris news assisted foreigners. Kaffirs closed higher on the day. Copper shares were decidedly firmer after an early weakness.

American securities opened irregular and sold off on realizations. Later prices hardened and rose a fraction, and at noon the market was uncertain, with values from ¼ above to ½ below yesterday's New York closing. Union Pacific and United States Steel led in the recovery in the early afternoon. Later Wall Street bought well, which caused a steady close. Ontario and Western was a feature.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES

COPPER ISSUES FEATURE

While there was but little expansion of trading on the Curb market yesterday the general tone of prices was firmer. This was particularly true of the copper mining shares, in which fractional advances occurred, reflecting the decrease shown in the published figures of the amount of metal on hand. Davis-Daly gained 9-16 net, to 5⅝; Inspiration, 3-16, to 7 9-16; Miami and Nevada Consolidated ⅛ each, to 15⅛ and 22¾ respectively; Ohio, 5-16, to 4 15-16, and United Copper ⅜, to 10½. Alaska Mines was again the centre of activity, and after opening at a recovery of 2 cents from Wednesday night's close it sold down rapidly to 12, from which point it rallied to 18, dropping to 14 at the close, a net loss for the day of 4 cents. Goldfield Consolidated was the next most active issue and was conspicuous for an early gain of ⅜, to 8¼, but lost practically all of the advance at the close. Among the industrial issues Standard Oil closed a point higher, at 678, having sold earlier in the day at 680, and American Tobacco lost 2, to 440. The bond dealings were further reduced by the transfer of the Atchison new 4s to the Stock Exchange, but a moderate demand was in evidence for Kansas City Southern 5s, Jones & Laughlin 5s and Western Pacific 5s.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Strengthens on Trade Reports—Closes Unchanged to 7 Points Up.

Cotton showed considerable firmness yesterday with prices at one time showing a gain of 20@22 points from the low level of Wednesday, and with the active months selling only 15 to 16 points below the high record of the season. The close was steady, unchanged to an advance of 7 points.

The market opened steady at a decline of 4 points to an advance of 1 point, generally 1 point lower to 1 point higher on the new crop months. Weather reports were favorable, but offerings were light.

A widely circulated tip that the market was to be put to 11 cents before the end of the week created apprehensions that liquidation by some of the large longs might be renewed.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT—The feature yesterday was a violent break near the close, July suffering most severely. The break immediately followed a strong turn due to export rumors and firmness of Minneapolis. Export business consisted of three loads here and twenty-two loads at outports. There were 96,000 bushels cleared from New York for Antwerp and Bristol, the wheat consisting of varieties of Manitoba. Cable news was strong at first, but the final ¼d to ½d advance at Liverpool represented a loss of half the early upturn there. Complaints of Hessian fly in Kansas and fears that the Missouri River might flood the rich bottom lands were factors in the early strength. Cash wheat in New York was quoted as follows: No. 2 red sold at $1.51 elevator, and was quoted nominally at $1.51 free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, $1.36⅞, and No. 2 hard Winter, $1.35⅞ free on board, afloat, both nominal.

CORN—New high records were made early yesterday on light receipts, excessive rains through the West, and a better cash demand. The market was well held until the late afternoon, when it weakened in response to the wheat heaviness. Only 148 cars were expected in Chicago on Friday. Liverpool was ¼d to ½d higher. Cash corn in New York remains nominal, No. 2, 86c, elevator, and 82c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 84½c, and No. 2 yellow, 84½c, free on board, afloat.

Ontario Transmission Company, Ltd.,
First Mortgage Gold 5s.

Dated August 16, 1905. Due May 1, 1945.
Interest payable May 1st and November 1st in New York City and Toronto, Can.
Guaranteed principal and interest by the Ontario Power Company, Ltd., of Niagara Falls.

For 1909 we estimate the earnings as follows: 10% of gross being deducted and 10% of operating expenses being added to currency contingency.

GROSS EARNINGS $830,500
Operating Expenses, Insurance, Taxes, etc... 157,200
NET EARNINGS $673,300
Less 10% of Gross and 10% of Operating Expenses for Contingencies.......... 98,770
$574,530
Less interest on $4,919,000 Ont. Power 5s and Int. on $1,248,000 Ont. Trans. 5s... 308,250
BALANCE $266,280

The operating expenses of generating electricity at Niagara are unquestionably less than at any other place and the field for distribution is unlimited. Our engineers advise that this company not only gets more duty from a cubic foot of water, but can unquestionably generate power more cheaply than any other plant in the vicinity. The plant is absolutely modern in every way. Competition is limited to the territory adjacent to the plant. There are at present nearly 600 miles of transmission lines owned by this Company distributing 66,000 H. P. The company has the right to use water to generate up to 200,000 H. P., leaving a large margin for expansion.

We offer these bonds at 95 and interest to yield 5.30

COPPER SURPLUS ALL DISPOSED OF

OTHER PRODUCERS HOPEFUL

Expect Their Surplus Supply Will Be Entirely Wiped Out by Aug. 1—169,800,000 Pounds on Hand This Month.

The Amalgamated Copper Company's surplus supply of copper, it was learned yesterday, has all been sold for delivery this month and next. Large producers of copper expect that the surplus of copper in their hands will have been greatly reduced if not entirely wiped out by the 1st of August, when deliveries will have been completed which have already been contracted for. How large a taking of copper by consumers is indicated by these statements, made by leading copper men yesterday, is shown by the fact that the monthly report of the Copper Producers' Association, issued yesterday, showed that on June 1 there were still 169,800,000 pounds of copper in the hands of producers reporting to the association.

The President of an important copper company, a member of the Copper Producers' Association, confirmed yesterday the statement that the stock of copper had all been sold for delivery within the next sixty days. He said:

"While the report of the amount of copper on hand shows that on June 1 there were still 169,800,000 pounds in the hands of producers, the actual state of the trade is not clearly shown by these figures. All of this copper has been sold for delivery in June and July, and the consumption in those two months promises to absorb most if not all of the current output. The July 1 figures should show a large reduction in the copper on hand, and the Aug. 1 figures are likely to show that the entire stock of copper in producers' hands has been taken by consumers."

This indicates that the Amalgamated Company, as well as the other large producers of copper, have been finding a much greater demand for their output. This improvement in demand has already been reflected in some advance in the price of the metal, particularly in the last month.

The movement toward the wiping out of the stocks of copper in the hands of producers began in May, and is reflected in the Copper Producers' Association figures made public yesterday. These showed a reduction of 13,349,932 pounds in the stock of copepr in the hands of producers, bringing the stocks down to 169,848,141 pounds. For the first four months of the year the production exceeded the consumption, but the tide turned in May, when against an output of 118,356,146 pounds the consumption amounted to 131,706,078 pounds. Since the end of January there has been a steady increase in the consumption of copper, and last month consumption caught up with and exceeded production.

The changes in the official staff of the Amalgamated Copper Company, necessitated by the death of H. H. Rogers, were effected at a meeting of the Board of Directors yesterday. John D. Ryan was elected President of the company and B. B. Thayer took his place as President of the Anaconda Copper Company, a subsidiary of the Amalgamated. Mr. Rogers's place as Vice President of the Anaconda company was taken by F. P. Addicks, who is now Vice President both of the Amalgamated and of the Anaconda. Mr. Addicks will continue to serve as Treasurer of the Anaconda company.

NEW ST. PAUL BOND ISSUE?

Wall Street Hears That the Road May Raise $25,000,000.

An issue of bonds by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul to finance the road's further construction requirements has been under discussion in banking circles, it was learned yesterday, although so far no definite step toward the issue has been taken by the road. The principal officers of the road are now in the West, and it may be some time yet before a definite conclusion is reached.

Meanwhile the information is had in banking circles that the chances are that the St. Paul will not at this time sell any part of the $100,000,000 bonds of the Pacific Coast extension which have been authorized and are being taken into the St. Paul's treasury as the money is expended on the Pacific Coast line, which is now practically completed.

It is more likely, bankers believe, that the St. Paul will issue bonds of the old company and put off the sale of the Pacific Coast extension bonds until the new road has more fully established its traffic.

Report had it yesterday that the St. Paul may raise as much as $25,000,000 for construction of branches for the Pacific Coast extension and for other purposes, but no more authoritative information was obtainable.

WAIT ON C. & S. DIVIDEND.

Road's Directors Expected to Cut the Rate—New Officers.

The Directors of the Colorado & Southern met yesterday and elected some new officers, but took no action regarding a dividend on the road's common stock. Last December an initial dividend of 2 per cent. was declared on the common stock before control of the road had been sold by the Hawley interests to the Burlington, and another dividend, were the payment to be made semi-annually, would be due to be paid on June 15.

The fact that no dividend was declared yesterday was taken as an indication that the Burlington proposes to put more of the road's earnings back into the property, and for this reason does not propose to maintain the stock on a 4 per cent. basis.

George F. Baker, Jr., was elected a Director of the Colorado & Southern yesterday, to take the place of the late J. W. Blythe. E. T. Nichols resigned as Secretary and Treasurer of the company, and was succeeded by B. F. James. L. E. Katzenbach was elected Assistant Secretary and Assistant Treasurer and J. M. Walker Transfer Agent.

NEWARK SCHOOLBOYS' GAMES.

Probably the largest number of schoolboy athletes who ever entered an athletic meet in this section of the country took part yesterday afternoon in the sixth annual outdoor games of the Newark Public School Athletic Association at Weidenmayer's Park, Newark. The total entries received reached the unprecedented figure of 3,491, and in the track and field events heats were so numerous that finals were almost lost sight of in the excitement.

There were forty-four schools represented in the meet, and each drew a big following of supporters to the grounds to encourage the embryo athletes who carried their colors in the events of the day. Not only did the schoolboys bring their voices to swell the volume of sound, but every noise-making device, from the customary tin horn to the baby's rattle of unusual size was in evidence and kept the stands, which were crowded almost to their capacity, in a continual uproar.

The baseball park never looked more unlike a place for playing ball. The general tone was that of a country fair, and the peanuts, popcorn, and soft drinks were not lacking to carry out the illusion. In the centre of the big field rose a lookout tower, from which the announcements were supposed to be made, but which hardly enlightened those almost directly underneath. In order to avoid confusion all the events that it was possible to rope off in a limited area were surrounded with a steel cable, and the field seemed literally covered with these small inclosures, with groups of boys working in all of them at the same time. In several instances picket fences were placed on the grounds, and these protected places were occupied by officials, and in one or two cases by contestants.

The general class of the events was of a high calibre, the youngsters racing over the combination track of sod and dirt in true imitation of the form displayed by the older participants in the athletic game. In all races the boys fought for every inch of the distance, close finishes being the rule rather than the exception, and the boys all considered themselves champions even if defeat came to their lot, for they had had the honor of upholding their school in the realm of athletics.

During the early part of the afternoon it looked as if rain might interfere with the sport, and for about an hour a drizzle did prevail, but this did not serve to dampen enthusiasm, though it made the running costumes something of a wet blanket.

The girls' part of the programme was run off on Monday in the armory, but all of the youthful athletes of the fair sex were on hand to watch with interest what the boys could accomplish in their specialties. Their interest centred for the most part in the relays, and the enthusiasm of the young ladies in the grand stand ought to have brought the best that any of the youngsters could accomplish.

WATSON'S CHALLENGE CUP.

LONDON, June 10.—The programme today at the International Horse Show at Olympia held many interesting events, including the important jumping competition for the Canadian Cup presented by Adam Beck.

C. W. Watson of Baltimore started the day well by taking first honors and the Berkeley Challenge Cup in four-in-hands exceeding 15 hands. 11 teams entered, with four spanking bays. Judge William H. Moore of New York received fifth prize in this event.

Mr. Watson was again first in the judging of 22 single harness horses over 14 and not exceeding 15 hands, shown to a two-wheel carriage, with Ringing Bells, who easily overshadowed his competitors. Judge Moore got three awards in this class. His White Walariel took fourth prize. Phyllis was placed in reserve and Lonsdale was commended.

Walter Winans was first with Avoca in Class 83, the judging of 17 riding horses not exceeding 15.1 hands. His Launcelot was second and his Londesborough third in this competition.

The judging of twelve tandems, exceeding 15.2 hands, brought together some handsome turnouts. W. H. Moore's Senator and Diplomat took third prize, while C. W. Watson's Moonshine and Virginia were fourth, and Louis Winan's Highlife and Beau Brummel fifth. Judge Moore's Hinocker and Hapsburg received sixth prize.

C. W. Watson's Lord Baltimore was second in Class 57 for single harness horses, shown to a phaeton and driven by ladies. Judge Moore's Lady Seaton was third.

The Canadian Cup, presented by Adam Beck in Class 105, a competition for officers only, was won by Lieut. Caffaratti with Genga.

RATE CONFERENCE TO-DAY.

Trunk Line Committee Will Try to Settle All Differences.

The Import Committee of the Trunk Line Association is scheduled to hold a meeting to-day to give further consideration to the matter of differential rates on import traffic, as between this port, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Boston. The committee will attempt to establish a full understanding regarding these rates between the Boston & Maine and the other railroads concerned.

A week ago a partial understanding was reached, and to-day's conference, it is thought, may succeed in definitely bringing to an end the contest over the import rates, which has been on ever since the Boston & Maine began to cut rates last December.

Communion Sets for Methodist Church Are Held to be Free of Duty.

It was decided yesterday by the Board of United States General Appraisers that two communion sets presented by Mrs. C. B. Needham to Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of Decatur, Ill., are entitled to enter this country free of duty. The customs authorities at Port Huron held up the sets and exacted duty under the metal schedule at the rate of 45 per cent.

According to Mrs. Needham, the communion sets were imported for presentation to a religious society, and not intended for sale. She, therefore, claimed that the articles fell within the meaning of Paragraph 649 of the free list. Judge Hay, who writes the decision for the board, sides with the protestant, and sets aside the imposition of duty made by the Collector, and directs that the sets be admitted free, and a reliquidation made of the duties illegally made.

The board overruled a protest filed by Arthur W. Robson of Baltimore, alleging that excessive duties were collected on so-called German "Kupper" beer imported in cases of large and small bottles. Duty was assessed on the basis of 2¼ gallons per case of 12 quart bottles and 24 pint bottles. The importer claimed that such assessment was excessive. It appears, however, that the beers do not correspond with any of the standard or conventional gauges established by the Treasury Department. On this account, Judge Somerville, in his decision for the board, denies the importer's contention for relief.

MRS. HOWARD GOULD TELLS MARITAL WOES

HER LIFE AT CASTLE GOULD

Trial of the suit for a separation from her husband, Howard Gould, brought by Mrs. Viola Katherine Gould, formerly Katherin Clemmons, the actress, was begun yesterday before Supreme Court Justice Dowling, without a jury, and Mrs. Gould herself was the first witness. When court adjourned for the day she was being cross-examined by De Lancey Nicoll, counsel for Howard Gould, and was more than holding her own. This part of her ordeal is likely to last at least the whole of to-day.

The chief points brought out during the session were that from the time of her marriage to Howard Gould in October, 1898, down to the time he left her in July, 1906, according to her own figures, her husband gave her $775,988; that she spent on an average $35,000 to $40,000 a year on dress; and that, after leaving her, Howard Gould sent an emissary to her with three proposals for their future.

One was that, although he had "placed his affections elsewhere," he would return to her if she would sign a paper consenting to relinquish the management of affairs at their home and cease annoying him and his friends. Failing in this being acceptable, a separation was the second alternative; or, if neither of these were attractive, then a divorce, "and if I didn't have a co-respondent," Mrs. Gould said her husband sent word, "then he would give me one." All these proposals, she said, were rejected.

Mrs. Gould was costumed from head to foot in black for her father who died about a year ago. Her gown was of silk, with an expansive V opening at the throat. Around her neck was a double strand of pearls. Her hat was a large black straw, around which was fastened a black net veil, which hung down her back. A large black aigrette perched on the top of the hat, and bobbed to and fro every time Mrs. Gould shook her head, which was often. In her hand she carried a black vanity case.

When the case was called yesterday morning Mrs. Gould sat beside her counsel, Clarence J. Shearn, at the lawyers' table. Then came Mr. Nicoll, with Cornelius J. Sullivan, who is associated with him in the defense. At the end of the table sat Howard Gould. He was wearing a light gray suit, and all day listened intently as his wife told her story. Once or twice he seemed amused at incidents in the recital.

The first step was a motion by Mr. Nicoll to dismiss the complaint on the ground that it did not set forth a good cause of action, which Justice Dowling denied. Mr. Shearn then made his opening statement, which was a brief résumé of the married life of the Goulds. Then he called Mrs. Gould to the stand.

Mrs. Gould, in answer to Mr. Shearn, said her name was Viola Katherine Gould. She said she was married at the Holland House, this city, on Oct. 6, 1898, by the Rev. Dr. Morrill Smith. After their marriage, she said, they lived in Fifty-seventh Street for a time. Mr. Shearn asked her to state the style in which they lived. She described it as a "life of society luxury," accompanied by the spending of a great deal of money.

Pictures Her Life with Husband.

It was in 1900, Mrs. Gould said, that they bought the Castle Gould property. "I had the sole charge of building and beautifying the place," she explained. "I designed and oversaw the construction of the greenhouses, and, in fact, everything about the place." At the end of 1902, Mrs. Gould said, they went to Egypt in her husband's yacht, the Niagara, which she described as a "magnificent boat," 240 feet long, with a beam of 70 feet.

"It had a crew of eighty men," she said. "Why, the dining saloon had seats for sixty guests, and the decorations for one room, I remember, cost $52,000."

Mrs. Gould was questioned as to the style of living kept at Castle Gould. She said they entertained lavishly, had from fifteen to eighteen servants, not including a dozen who were employed in the stables and forty or fifty laborers who worked on the estate. At one time, she said, they had as many as eighty laborers there, who "were working directly under me planting trees," she said, adding, "and I used to hire, discharge, and pay them. Mr. Gould gave me the money to do so, but I had entire charge."

"Can you tell what money you received from Mr. Gould for this purpose?" asked Mr. Shearn.

Gould Gave Her $10,000 a Month.

"Oh, yes," she replied, "I have a statement of all the money he ever gave me up to June, 1906." She produced a typewritten statement and read it. It showed that in 1898, the year of their marriage, Mr. Gould gave her $5,000. The following year she received $73,000 from him, and thereafter until December, 1905, payments averaging about $10,000 a month appeared in the statement.

She hastened to explain, thought, that out of this money she paid numerous household expenses, as well as providing for the upkeep of the stables. Mrs. Gould said she could produce the canceled checks for every penny of the money up to 1905, but after that time she said she left them at Castle Gould, "and I presume you have them," she said to Mr. Nicoll. Two items of $10,000 each, she explained, were for automobiles she had purchased.

Mr. Shearn wanted to know who was managing the Castle Gould estate in 1906, when Mrs. Gould returned there. This was shortly before the separation.

"Morris Malloy," replied Mrs. Gould with some bitterness, "Mr. Gould brought him from England to take charge." She was asked concerning three conversations she had with her husband about this time. One, she explained, took place in June, 1905, and had to do with a litigation with a Mr. Haydell, over an architect's bill. She said her husband said to her: "If you do not go on the stand as a witness, I will divorce you."

The last conversation was the one which precipitated the parting. It was in July, 1906.

"I told my husband," said Mrs. Gould, "that Morris Malloy had come into my dining room and had had a fight with the butler; that he had gone into his (Gould's) bedroom while I was in bed in the adjoining room, and how, on another occasion, he had sat on a sofa in the drawing room and blown smoke into my face, and when I remonstrated with him, said he knew his business, and how long I would last, and that he had a contract with Mr. Gould."

Mrs. Gould said her husband responded that he would have to see Malloy's contract, but that was the end of it.

"The last time I saw my husband," said Mrs. Gould, "was on the Monday morning following this conversation. It was July 15, I believe. He came in and said good-bye to me. I have never seen him since or received any communication from him.

Alleged Proposal of Divorce.

The next thing, Mrs. Gould said, was a visit she received from her cousin, Elijah W. Sells. "He said he had been commissioned by Mr. Gould to see me," said Mrs. Gould. "He said that Mr. Gould had placed his affections elsewhere, but that he would come back to me if I would sign a paper agreeing to give up the management of my home, and also not to annoy him and his friends. If I did not accept the terms, he offered me a separation, or a divorce, and said if I didn't have a co-respondent he would give me one."

"Did you accept?" asked Mr. Shearn.

"Most certainly not," replied Mrs. Gould.

Mrs. Gould then told how miserable her life was made at Castle Gould by Malloy; how he would not permit food to be brought into the house, and refused her the use of the horses and carriages. "I lived under the most dreadful conditions," she added. The final insult came, she said, when she was leaving Castle Gould for good. Malloy refused to allow her the use of a team to take her trunks to the station.

"I had to send to the village to get a teamster," said Mrs. Gould, "and he had to slip in by the side gate, while Malloy was away."

Mrs. Gould went to the St. Regis from Castle Gould. She told of her troubles there through her husband not supplying her with money.

"Have you any private estate?" asked Mr. Shearn.

"Nothing whatever."

She said that during that period, until Mr. Gould made her an allowance of $25,000 a year, she lived on credit. She told of how her clothing, which she had left at Castle Gould, was sent to her at the St. Regis in "ordinary wooden boxes."

"Have you ever had a conversation with Mr. Gould about his wealth or income?"

"Yes; he told me soon after our marriage that he had made enough in speculations and investments so that if he died he would leave me enough to live on at Castle Gould in the same style as we were then, even if his family took away the $5,000,000 which they wanted on account of our marriage. He also said he had never spent more than one-third of his income before marriage, and he wanted to go on living at the same scale."

After Mrs. Gould had said that she never agreed with her husband to live separate and had given him no justification for the step he had taken, Mr. Shearn concluded the direct examination.

Mr. Nicoll's first question had to do with the statement produced by Mrs. Gould showing the money she had received from her husband.

Q.—Where was this statement made out, Mrs. Gould? A.—In the St. Regis, in my room.

Q.—Who was present? A.—A young woman stenographer.

Mrs. Gould explained that she dictated the matter to the stenographer, using her bank book as the source of information. She said she kept two banking accounts—one for household expenses in the name of Mrs. Howard Gould; the other for her personal use, in the name of Mrs. Katherine Gould. Mr. Nicoll asked to see the Katherine Gould account. She said she entered in this account sums like $10 and $20, which her husband sometimes gave her, representing his fees for attending Directors' meetings.

Mr. Nicoll noticed two items in the personal account for $16,000 and $10,000, respectively. He wanted to know if these came in the category of "little amounts for directors' meetings." Mrs. Gould said these were special presents given her for the purpose of buying two automobiles.

Q.—What is the total amount of money received during all these years? A.—I am not very good at figures, but I have added it up roughly, and it amounts to $775,988.

Q.—Did any of the money in the Mrs. Howard Gould account go to paying expenses of the yacht? A.—What yacht?

Q.—Did you know that Mr. Gould had a yacht, the Niagara? A.—Of course.

Q.—Was any of this money spent for the yacht? A.—No, of course not.

Q.—Was any of it spent for liquor?

The suddenness of this question caused Mrs. Gould to become quite excited. "Why, Mr. Nicoll," she said confusedly, "I told you that the money was used for household expenses."

Baited by Mr. Nicoll.

Q.—Then some of it was used for liquor? A.—Yes, and for coffee, butter, tea, sugar, vinegar, onions.

Q.—And oil? A.—Yes, and oil, too. Also horse food and chicken feed.

Q.—Did I hear you call it chicken feed? A.—You did.

Mr. Nicoll then took the witness over the ground covered by her statement. She explained the various items, but when it came to fixing dates could only do so by referring to events. To one question she replied: "Was that the year of the Galveston flood?" A trip to Norway she recalled because the Captain of the boat on which they were "was an Englishman, and ran us on the rocks."

Q.—When did you first go to Castle Gould? A.—The year of the yacht races.

Q.—Do you know what year that was?

Mr. Shearn came to the rescue and said: "It was the second series of the Shamrock races in 1901."

"Mr. Shearn knows more about yacht racing than he does about the Galveston flood," put in Mr. Nicoll.

Mrs. Gould said that her husband stopped giving her an allowance in December, 1906, and she received nothing from him until the following November, when he made her an allowance of $25,000 a year.

Q.—Do you know that when Mr. Gould left you there were bills amounting to $112,000 contracted by you outstanding? A.—I do not.

Q.—Now let us see. In September, 1906, you went to Tiffany's and bought $37,000 worth of jewelry. Do you remember that? A.—I do not. I went to Tiffany's and bought some things, but I don't recollect what they were.

Q.—Do you recollect buying $21,000 worth of articles at Cartier's in Paris? A.—I do not.

Q.—Do you recollect spending $10,000 at Wanamaker's in 1906? A.—I don't remember; I went to Wanamaker's and bought some things, but I don't know what they were.

$20,000 Millinery Bill.

Q.—Do you remember going to Mme. Osborn & Co. and spending $20,570 for millinery? A.—I don't remember what I bought. I would be very glad to go over the bills with you; you have them.

Q.—Did you read Mr. Gould's affidavit in reply to your application for alimony? A.—I read it several times. It contained such extraordinary statements that I could not understand it—in fact, I don't understand it now.

Q.—Well, we'll try and understand it together. I read from it: "From the month of January, 1899, to July, 1906, I paid to the plaintiff in cash $776,500, besides paying a number of other bills for her." A.—I think I give him credit for more than that—$775,000. I should like to see those bills. Perhaps he might have paid somebody else's bills.

Q.—Had you any means when Mr. Gould separated from you? A.—I was absolutely without means and heavily in debt at that time, with the exception of a few hundreds in cash.

Q.—Had you disposed of the securities Mr. Gould had given you? A.—What securities? I don't recall he had given me any.

Q.—Do you recollect his giving you some stock in the Missouri Pacific Company, amounting to about $100,000? A.—I had 500 Missouri Pacific of my own. I had them before I was married.

Q.—Do you mean to say that you had them before you were married? A.—Yes.

Q.—Who gave them to you?

Mr. Shearn objected and was sustained. However, Mr. Nicoll had asked, "Mr. Gould?"

"No, I didn't say Mr. Gould," replied the witness.

Q.—Isn't it a fact that at the time of the separation there were 640 shares standing in your name in the books of the Missouri Pacific? A.—Yes, but I paid for the balance out of my own money.

Q.—Well, that was out of the money Mr. Gould gave you? A.—Yes, but you are trying to make out he gave it to me outside of my allowance.

Q.—Not whether they are worth $1,000 or $100,000? A.—I haven't the slightest idea.

Q.—Where did you get them? A.—I couldn't tell you that. Some came from the Fifth Avenue house, others I purchased here and abroad.

The manner in which Mrs. Gould answered this question caused Mr. Nicoll to say: "Was that an impolite question?" Mrs. Gould quickly replied: "I don't think you could be impolite."

Q.—Have you the warehouse receipt? A.—I don't think I have. It may be at the St. Regis. You see, all my things were kept there, because my husband didn't pay my bill.

Mr. Nicoll then inquired about the purchase of the Blue Gap Farm at Lynchburg, Va., by Mrs. Gould. She said she took possession of it on Jan. 1, 1906. Before making up her mind to buy it, she said she took her cousin, Mr. Sells, down to look it over.

Q.—Why didn't you take your husband? A.—He quit me.

Q.—Where did you get the money to pay for it? A.—I had part of it, and part of it I borrowed.

Q.—Who from? A.—I sold some Iron Mountain, which I bought in my early married life.

Q.—When did you last see Mr. Dustin Farnum? A.—I really couldn't tell you.

Q.—Why not? A.—Because I don't recall it.

Q.—Did you see him recently—within the last month? A.—No.

Q.—Have you seen him during this year? A.—I don't recall.

At this stage the court adjourned until this morning. Before doing so Justice Dowling, at the request of Mr. Shearn, had the names of William McLaughlin, former head of the Detective Bureau, and William F. Peabody, a former Lieutenant of Police, called. Both responded. They are to be witnesses.

Mrs. Gould left the court by a side door and escaped a large crowd waiting to get a glimpse of her.

George B. Cortelyou and Oscar S. Straus, members of the Roosevelt Cabinet, sent letters in which they praised the work of Mr. Watchorn. Mr. Cortelyou was not present owing to the recent death of his young daughter, while Mr. Straus wrote that he had been forbidden to come by his doctor. Mr. Cortelyou wrote that Mr. Watchorn's work on Ellis Island had been marked by zeal and efficiency, and Mr. Straus wrote of Mr. Watchorn as a man of nobility of character, "fearless, bright, and humanely just."

Mr. Cady, the toastmaster, said that Mr. Watchorn, who had landed in New York thirty years before a poor boy, had worked a transformation on Ellis Island.

John J. Delany said that Mr. Watchorn had performed his duties for the betterment of the world, and Mr. Schwab, who followed, spoke for the steamship men.

"The importance of the duties of the gatekeeper of New York," said Mr. Schwab, "are apparent. On that official depends the administration of the immigration laws and the future welfare of thousands. The steamship companies can testify that Robert Watchorn strictly enforced those laws and that his enforcement of them was just. No personal sacrifice was too great if he was convinced that a wrong might be righted.

"I remember the case of a little Jewish boy, orphaned by the massacres in Russia, who was sent to this country to his brother, his only relative. When the brother could not be located the boy was ordered deported. The next morning, after the boy had been placed on the ship, Mr. Watchorn heard from the brother. He got a tug, went after that little boy, took him in his arms from the liner, and sent him on his way West."

Congressman Bennet, the next speaker, who is on the House Committe on Immigration and is also a member of the Ellis Island Commission, paid a high tribute to Mr. Watchorn. He said that he was telling a secret when he said that the commission in its investigations had sent men and women over the seas in the steerage of liners to investigate conditions, and that these investigators had never made a report that was not favorable to Mr. Watchorn.

After Dr. Fagnani had spoken Mr. Watchorn thanked his friends for their good words. No Government, he said, had a better crew of devoted workmen than the 500 men and women employed on Ellis Island.

Many Pictures
The Sunday Times
Many Features

THREE most enjoyable paintings will be splendidly reproduced in the Picture Section of The Times on Sunday. They are "The Scandalmongers" and "Bedtime," two new pictures much admired in London at the present time, and "Secret Correspondence," from the brush of a German painter. The themes and executions of these canvases will be enjoyed by every one who sees them. In general the Picture Section will offer an uncommon variety. There will be a capital page of current outdoor sports of all sorts in and about New York City; a page depicting the Sunday crowds of Coney Island and their various ways of finding enjoyment; splendid protographs from Gettysburg apropos of the unveiling of the shaft in honor of the regular army; commencement-time pictures from Bryn Mawr, Columbia, and the University of Pennsylvania; interesting photographs showing the new city of Messina, pictures that suggest a Western mining camp; pictures of women and winners at the Mineola dog show; a page which will interest every theatregoer, scenes from the plays now holding the stage in New York—and other photographs of equal interest.

The Magazine Section will contain a most entertaining series of features and articles. Thomas F. Millard will contribute an instructive and readable article on the reported sending of the yellow cord to Yuan Shih Kai, and its significance in China. There will be an article on Beverley—this Summer's Oyster Bay—that will well repay every reader. What Congress costs the country every day while it is revising the tariff will be told in another article. What it means in dollars and cents that 200,000 fewer people are going abroad this year than last will be the subject of another feature. Many of the best-known stars of the stage will tell how they came to be actresses—or actors—and will describe their beginnings and first appearances. Thomas L. Masson will contribute a capital feature, his own analysis of the American sense of humor, and Hashimura Togo will be represented by another "Japanese Schoolboy" letter. There will be some entertaining correspondence describing the studios and the stage in Paris in the Springtime of 1909; the narration of an Italian tragedy which in many ways parallels the story of Beatrice Cenci; a good story on the smuggling of art, and many other features certain to be found well worth the reading.
